PREFACE.

---

THIS work had come into such common use that it became a duty to continue its availability by bringing in serviceable matter to the date of its reprinting. In connection with this labor a careful review of decisions has been had, omissions of an important nature supplied, and pertinent statutory changes or additions have been noted. While the original system so well approved by the profession has been continued, some rearrangement and additional subdivision of material has been made for purposes of greater convenience. This will be specially observed in the case of "Master and Servant" and "Municipality." The new work has been done under my supervision, by Mr. Berkeley C. Austin, of New York, who by legal capacity, and several years of experience in connection with other publications, has unusual equipment for the service. He has been aided by Mr. Shelley F. Austin, who has been fitted for such association by participation in similar labors. The result illustrates their fidelity and painstaking. The object sought is to keep in the hands of the profession a work that will furnish immediate and ready resource for those interested in the subject.

EDWARD B. THOMAS.

IV. TRUSTEES, DIRECTORS, FINANCIAL AGENTS AND OFFICERS.

VI. RECEIVERS AND ASSIGNEES.

I. Liability of Principal for Negligence of His Agent.

The master is liable to a third person for the negligence, or misfeasance of the servant, while the latter is acting in the master's business, and within the scope of the servant's employment, notwithstanding the fact that the servant's negligent act may be contrary to the master's direction, and, as between the two, a violation of the duty which the latter owes to the former. Quinn v. Power, 87 N. Y. 535.

Schuler v. Hudson R. Co., 38 Barb. 553; Toledo, etc. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185; Johnson v. Chicago, etc. R. Co., 58 Iowa 348; Buckingham v. Fisher, 70 Ill. 124.

(a). WHEN THE AGENCY EXISTS.

"A" bought a box of "B" and sent his porter to "B's" store to get it, and such porter, while lowering it to the sidewalk, injured passer-by. "A" was liable and not "B." Stevens v. Armstrong, 6 N. Y. 435; rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

One directing his servant to shovel snow from a roof, is liable to a third person for negligent execution of the work by servant, or by one who volunteers to help him. Althorff v. Wolfe, 22 N. Y. 355 aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

Citing Booth v. Mister, 7 Carr. & Payne, 66. It would have been different had defendant contracted to have the work done. Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48; Lansing v. N. Y. & C. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 525; Tousey v. Roberts, 114 N. Y. 312.

Master of boat conveying wheat consigned to Albany was, upon arrival there, directed by consignees to proceed across the river to East Albany, where cargo undelivered was injured. The carrier contended that the master in crossing the river was not acting under his employment or authority. But the agreement was construed to authorize a delivery at the port of Albany and not merely the city of Albany and it was held that there was not sufficient delivery to discharge the carrier. Gibbs v. Van Buren, 48 N. Y. 661; aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

Where a person was sued for negligence of his alleged coachman, in causing a collision, evidence that defendant did not own the horses and coach was evidence that he did not hire the coachman, in the absence of other evidence on that subject, and whoever owned the coach and horses was therefore liable for the injury. Sloane v. Elmer, 64 N. Y. 201, rev'g 1 Hun, 310.

The defendants notified the vendor of boilers, that they were defective; the vendor sent "O" to repair them, and when done, to "fire up" the boilers and test them. "N," the defendant's engineer fired up the boilers, and an explosion occurred, killing "O."

It was presumed, that the fire was started at the request of those interested in the work of repair, or that the engineer voluntarily did it, and if so, the defendants were not liable; and even if "N" were acting as a servant of defendants, there was nothing to permit any inference of negligence on his part. The defendants did not owe the same duty to "O," which they would have owed to an employé of their own, into whose hands the boiler had been placed for use. Olive v. The Whitney Marble Co., 103 N. Y. 292.

An owner agreed that the rents of a house should be paid the defendant, his creditor, to meet a debt; the owner would not pay for sewer connection, and the defendant, to keep the tenant, suggested to a plumber to make it at defendant's expense. The plumber left open a ditch and the plaintiff was thereby hurt. Defendant was not liable for plumber's act. Kelly v. Doody, 116 N. Y. 575.

Distinguishing Clifford v. Dam, 81 N. Y. 52.

"L," a stevedore, engaged the plaintiff, a gangway man, to assist in unloading the defendant's vessel. "L" was paid a price per ton and the defendant furnished the power and the men to run the winch. The plaintiff gave the signals to the winchmen to "go ahead," and the load was hoisted by a rope winding around a drum of the winch. The rope ran off the drum, and the winchmen stopped and called the plaintiff's attention to this, and the latter seized the rope to lift it on the drum, ordering the winchmen, at the same time, to "back" so as to release the rope, but the winchmen went ahead and the plaintiff's hand was drawn against the drum and injured. "L" had no power to order or control the winchmen and was not a co-employé of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff recovered against the defendant on the ground of the winchmen's negligence. Johnson v. Netherlands Ass. Co., 132 N. Y. 576.

Defendant's apprentice, with his assent, took defendant's team to ride and did injury. While the apprentice was in custody the defendant entered into an agreement to pay for injuries. Defendant was liable. Sherwood v. Fischer, 3 Hun, 606.

Defendant let stevedores take his engine and its engineer to hoist material; stevedore's servant was injured by alleged negligence of engineer in lowering hoisting rope too rapidly. Defendant was not liable, as he owed plaintiff no duty that was broken (following King v. N. Y. Central R. Co., 66 N. Y. 181, and Burke v. DeCastro, 11 Hun, 354). Coyle v. Pierrepont, 33 Hun, 311.

Reargument and held that defendant was liable for engineer's negligence (following Gerlach v. Edelmeyer, 15 J. & S. 292, aff'd 88 N. Y. 645). Coyle v. Pierrepont, 37 Hun, 379.

Defendant sent his servant to Fisher's factory to receive paper shavings thrown in bags from upper floor through a hatchway. Defendant's servant undertook to warn passers-by; plaintiff, one of Fisher's employes, in passing, through default of defendant's servant to warn, was injured. She knew that the hatchway was used for lowering papers; this did not make her liable for contributory negligence. Defendant liable for negligence of servant. Post v. Stockwell, 44 Hun, 28.

Where a union station is within control or ownership of several roads, though managed through the medium of a distinct corporation, any one of them is liable for the acts of a station agent. Penfield v. Cleveland R. Co., 26 App Div. 413; s. c., 50 N. Y. Supp. 79.

Injury caused by servant of defendant while hired by him to another with full control and direction for the occasion, imposed no liability on defendant. Brown v. Smith, 86 Ga. 274.

That negligence of a third person contributed to the general result does not relieve a principal from liability for negligence of his agent. Chicago v. O'Malley, 196 Ill. 197.

Defendant's soliciting agent, though off duty for the day, had been requested by a fellow servant to purchase an article for use in the business. After purchasing the article, the agent became intoxicated and injured plaintiff. Defendant was not liable. Corper &c. Malting Co. v. Huggins, 96 Ill. App. 144.

Power of control and discharge held necessary to the application of the rule of respondeat superior. Crudup v. Schreiner, 98 Ill. App. 337.

Damage done to a customer's building in the delivery of coal by one not an employé, whose delivery was subsequently ratified. The ratification created the relation of master and servant and established liability for the damage. Dempsey v. Chambers, 154 Mass. 330.

Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169; Colvin v. Peabody, 155 id. 104; Stevenson v. Joy, 152 id. 45.

A person employed by a servant without authority takes the risk of the employment. Blair v. Grand Rapids &c. R. Co., 60 Mich. 124.

A master may be liable for the act of his sub-agent or under-servant, unless he be under the exclusive control of another. So. Express Co. v. Brown, 67 Miss. 260.

A person employed without master's authority or knowledge, by one of his servants, injured another. Master not liable. Mangan v. Foley, 33 Mo. App. 250.

One hired by defendant's servant without defendant's authority, negligently handled a crate of crockery, injuring plaintiff. Defendant not liable. Jewell v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 55 N. H. 84.

For negligence of an independent contractor working according to his own methods and not subject to the control of his employer, the latter is not liable. Powell v. Construction Co., 88 Tenn. 692.

See "Contractor," post p. 631.

Care in the selection of agents held no defense to an action for their negligence. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Miller, (Tex. Civ. App.) 66 S. W. Rep. 139.

That under a trackage agreement a company's trains were subjected to a joint schedule and the control of another's train dispatcher, etc., did not affect its liability for the negligence of its own engineer in the operation of the train itself. Clark v. Geer, 86 Fed. Rep. 447.

Contract for depot facilities held not to render a railroad company liable for the negligence of the depot company's servants. Brady v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 114 Fed. Rep. 100.

Injury caused by employes while doing certain things, which their employers are not under obligation to do, imposes no liability on the latter. Dells v. Stollenwerk, 78 Wis. 339.

Father offered his son money for all crows killed in his fields. The son negligently injured another with his gun while two miles away, squirrel hunting. Son was held not to be father's servant. Winkler v. Fisher, 95 Wis. 355.

(b). WHEN AGENT IS ACTING WITHIN SCOPE OF HIS EMPLOYMENT.

Although the servant deviate from instructions of the master, yet, if a negligent act be done in the prosecution of the master's business, the master would be liable. The instructions of the master to the servant do not govern. Cosgrove v. Ogden, 49 N. Y. 255; aff'g judgt for pl'ff.

Goods discharged upon carrier's pier were but partially protected; while defendant's agents were engaged in placing tarpaulins over them to protect them from the storm, one of the tarpaulins was forcibly taken from them, against their protest, by persons in the carrier's employ, and used to cover the hatch of the ship. The act of the carrier's servants was wrongful, but the injury was not willful in the sense that they designed it; they were at the time engaged in the master's business, and although he did not authorize the wrong, it was done in the course of their employment and for his benefit, and he was liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Action was to recover freight charges. Gleadell v. Thomson, 56 N. Y. 194; aff'g judgt for def'ts, who were the owners of the goods.

Plaintiff purchased gin of the defendants, and it was shipped to him. The plaintiff shipped it back on the ground that it was deficient in quantity, and defendant's car-man took it from the depot and receipted for it. The defendants declined to receive it and directed the car-man to return it, which he did not do. The defendants, by suit, recovered the price of the gin against the plaintiff, which recovery was paid by the plaintiff upon the assurance that the gin had been re-shipped. In an action to recover back this amount, it was held, that although the car-man's receipt did not bind the defendants, yet it made them liable for the custody and safe-keeping of the property, and hence for the loss thereof, from the car-man's negligence or misconduct. Purcell v. Jaycox, 59 N. Y. 288.

The defendant's clerk threw down a bale of cotton and injured a longshoreman loading cotton. It was for the jury to say whether the clerk was acting within the scope of duty. Evidence as to clerk's duties was conflicting. Courtney v. Baker, 60 N. Y. 1.

"C," defendant's agent, was directed to test a boiler under pressure of 150 pounds, but at the wish of the customer that it be tested under a pressure of 180 pounds, replied that "he would test it to 200, anyhow." When the steam began to escape at a pressure of 198 pounds "C" held down the lever of the escape valve, whereby the boiler exploded and a person passing in the street was injured. The act of "C" was reckless and foolhardy, and he was acting in the defendant's business, and, although in making the tests he went beyond their express wish, they were chargeable. Ochsenbein v. Shapley, 85 N. Y. 214; rev'g judg't for pl'ff on account of error in charge.

A ferryboat making a regular trip took on a boatman, and, without compensation, the pilot agreed to leave him on board his boat in mid-stream, and, going out of his course to do so, so collided with a part of a tow as to knock off the plaintiff's intestate, who was on a canal boat attached to said tow, and kill him. Although the owners of the ferryboat were ignorant of the transaction, they were liable. Quinn v. Power, 81 N. Y. 535; rev'g 17 Hun, 102, and judg't for def't. The case was retried, and a judgment for plaintiff reversed for improper evidence. 29 Hun, 183.

See Joel v. Morison, 6 Carr. & P. 50; Sleath v. Wilson, 9 id. 607; Phila. & Read &c. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. (U. S.) 486.

The plaintiff recovered for being run over in the street by careless and reckless conduct, or want of skill, on the part of a driver, defendant's servant. Groth v. Washburn, 89 N. Y. 615, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

Defendant's car driver asked boy of fourteen to give him a drink from his can; boy stepped on platform to do so; driver drank, but would not stop to let boy off; whipped up the horses just as the boy was alighting. Defendant was liable. Day v. B. C. R. Co., 12 Hun, 435; s. c. aff'd, 76 N. Y. 593.

Employé asked boy to walk up elevated track to hydrant for water, which he did, pail in hand. In crossing track in front of an engine, the engine was started so as to cause the plaintiff injury. Engineer saw him coming, one hundred feet away, knew he was going to hydrant and must cross the track, but saw no more of him until hurt. It was the engineer's duty to see that the boy was out of the way. Master was liable. Corcoran v. N. Y. Elevated R. Co., 19 Hun, 368.

Passenger was informed by conductor or train agent, that he could get off train at station and continue his journey upon the next train on the same ticket, but the agent of the second train refused to recognize the ticket, which had been punched, and put passenger off. Defendant was liable. Tarbell v. Northern Central R. Co., 24 Hun, 51.

Citing Story's Agency, § 452; Pa. R. Co. v. McCloskey, 23 Pa. St. 526.

Distinguishing Dietrich v. Penn. R. Co., 71 Pa. St. 432; Oil Creek &c. Co. v. Clark, 72 id. 231; Denny v. N. Y. C. &c. R. Co., 5 Daly, 50.

Agent gave bill of lading reciting "contents unknown," but for certain amount of beans; consignor drew draft, with bill annexed, on consignee and discounted it with plaintiff. In fact, the goods were never delivered to the company. Defendant was liable for the result of its agent's act. Discussion of effect of bill as between it and shipper, and between it and third persons acting on faith thereof. Bank of Batavia v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. Co., 33 Hun, 589, ordering judg't for pl'ff on the verdict; aff'd, 106 N. Y. 195.

Citing Farmers & Mechanics' Bank v. Butchers & Drovers' Bank, 16 N. Y. 125; Farmers & M. Bank v. Erie Ry. Co., 72 id. 188; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuler, 34 id. 30; Armour v. Michigan Central R. Co., 65 id. 111; rev'g 3 J. & S. 563, and other cases. See post, p. 1081.

From opinion.—"In Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665, it was held, that a bill of lading made by a master of a ship, for goods not received, gave no right of action against the owner of the vessel to the plaintiff, who had made advances on faith of the bill of lading, and taken indorsement and delivery of it from the person named in it as the shipper. And that principle and case were adopted and followed in Hubbersty v. Ward, 8 Exch. 330; 18 Eng. L. & E. 551; Coleman v. Riches, 16 C. B. 104; 29 Eng. L. & E. 323; Schooner Freeman v. Buckingham, 18 How. (U. S.) 182; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. (15 Otto) 7; Robinson v. Memphis & Charleston Railroad Company, 9 Fed. R. 129, 142; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Wilkens, 44 Md. 11; s. c. 22 Am. R. 26. This proposition is put upon the ground that the master of the ship, and the agent of the carrier, have no authority to issue bills of lading for property not received for shipment, that such is the limitation of his apparent authority of which everybody must take notice, and that it is a fraud on the part of the agent for which he, and not his principal, is liable to one making advances on the faith of the bill of lading. And the principle of these cases is declared as the correct and governing rule in Brown v. Powell D. S. Coal Company, L. R. 10 C. P. 562; s. c. 14 Moak, 420; Sears v. Wingate, 3 Allen 103; Lowell F. C. Savings Bank v. Winchester, 8 id. 109-118; and see Daniel on Neg. Insts. (3d ed §§ 1733, 1733a.) Directly in conflict with those first before cited on this question is Sioux City & P. Railroad Company v. First National Bank, 10 Neb. 556; s. c. 35 Am. R. 488, and they do not seem to have the support on principle of the courts of this state."

A carrier is not liable to an innocent holder of a bill of lading of cotton issued fraudulently by carrier's agent in conjunction with another person. Friedlander v. Texas R. Co., 130 U. S. 416. See Hickox v. Buckingham, 18 How. 182; The Lady Franklin, 8 Wall. 325; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 77; Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665; Cox v. Bruce, 18 Q. A bill of lading issued for goods not received imposes no liability upon a carrier. Nat. Bank of Commerce v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 44 Minn. 224. See Lalland v. His Creditors, 42 La. Ann. 705.

Transfer of a bill of lading to an innocent holder for value does not preclude defense: so where the receipt of a bill of lading for cotton was accepted in the faith that the cotton would be delivered, and it was not delivered, the carrier not liable. Hazard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 67 Miss. 32.

It was a question for the jury whether an express agent at a station had authority to keep over night, for the owner, a trunk which had been carried to its destination, and charges paid, and receipted for by the owner, and which the agent delivered on the following day to the wrong man. Oderkirk v. Fargo Express Co., 61 Hun. 418.

A gang of trackmen were removing an old cattle pass on the railroad track for the purpose of rebuilding it. The two sticks, about ten feet in length by twelve inches thick, were, upon their removal, appropriated by one of the workmen, and by the assistance of his companions carried across the track and thrown in a ditch in front of the company's land about six or seven feet from the beaten track of the highway, where they remained from Thursday afternoon until Saturday-morning, when a team was scared by them and started into a run, throwing out the driver's wife and injuring her. The question whether the employ  s were engaged in the master's business when they placed the sticks beside the way, so as to bind the master, was for the jury. Tinker v. N. Y., O. & W. R. Co., 71 Hun. 431, rev'g non-suit.

A passer-by was struck by a box thrown from a mill door to a wagon. The act of the servant of the mill owner in throwing the box was held to be within the scope of his employment, though his master had nothing to do with the transportation of the goods from his mill. Kelly v. Cohoes Knitting Co., 8 App. Div. 156.

Citing Cosgrove v. Ogden, 49 N. Y. 255; Mott v. Consumers Ice Co., 73 id. 543.

Defendant's clerk, in the absence of the regular driver, undertook to drive defendant's wagon: though not a part of his regular duties, he had performed this service on several previous occasions. In an action for injuries from clerk's negligent driving the court refused to dismiss the complaint on the ground that he was not a servant acting within the scope of his authority. Petersen v. Hubbell, 12 App. Div. 372.

Defendant's servants, while engaged in carting ice to a place, deviated from the direct route and stopped for purposes of their own. Plaintiff was injured by ice falling from the wagon upon resuming their journey. The master was liable as it appeared that the injury was caused by the defective loading of the wagon and not by reason of any act following from the deviation. Geraty v. National Ice Co., 16 App. Div. 174; s. c. aff'd, 160 N. Y. 658.

Defendant's clerk, while moving some of defendant's goods, borrowed, without his knowledge or authority, a handcart for the purpose; and while so engaged damaged plaintiff's property. The court charged the jury that, to find for the plaintiff, they must find that the servant was acting, if not under instructions, with the knowledge and approval of the defendant. Held erroneous, the test being whether the motive prompting the act and the purpose sought by it are within the scope of the servant's employment. Keep v. Walsh, 11 App. Div. 104.

A party hired a wagon from defendant, and on returning it, was told to leave it in the street, by one of defendant's employés. It was allowed to remain there with the knowledge of defendant's foreman, and over an hour afterwards plaintiff was injured by the falling of its shafts. Defendant was held liable. Sullivan v. McManus, 19 App. Div. 167.

Defendant's servant after using benzine to clean matrices, threw the waste benzine out of the window, contrary to instructions. It fell upon the plaintiff and caused injury. Defendant was held liable. Reigler v. Tribune Association, 40 App. Div. 324; s. c., aff'd, 167 N. Y. 542.

Defendant's servant deviated a couple of blocks from his route to visit a friend, and stopping, left the horses unattended in the street. They started off but were stopped and started back by a stranger who injured plaintiff in doing so. The deviation was held to be a misconduct within the scope of the servant's employment and not an abandonment of it. Williams v. Koehler, 41 App. Div. 426.

Employés of an electric company engaged in stringing its wires on poles receiving general directions to cut only such overhanging branches as could not be protected by insulation. The company was held liable for their acts in exceeding such necessity. Van Sieten v. Jamaica Electric Light Co., 45 App. 1; s. c., aff'd, 168 N. Y. 650.

Plaintiff left defendant's restaurant without being served and without stopping at the cashier's desk. The general manager, thinking he was attempting to avoid payment, followed him to the sidewalk and had him arrested. Defendant was held liable. Dupre v. Childs, 52 App. Div. 306; s. c., aff'd, 169 N. Y. 585.

Defendant's driver was directed to collect the price of goods marked "C. O. D." or return them to the store. The goods in question were sent in exchange for goods returned by plaintiff but were, through some mistake, marked "C. O. D." Plaintiff sought to retain the goods and the driver procured his arrest for theft. The driver's act was within the scope of his employment and defendant was liable for false arrest. Craven v. Bloomingdale, 54 App. Div. 266; s. c., rev'd, 171 N. Y. 439, on ground that it was not a case for punitive damages.

President and manager of a corporation having no personal interest in the matter, but for the corporation's interest solely, made an arrest consulting with the corporation attorney before doing so. The corporation was responsible for his act. Schwartz v. Van Wie &c. Grocery Co., 69 App. Div. 282.

An employé in charge of a restaurant caused the arrest of one who refused to pay for a meal. Warren v. Dennett, 17 Misc. 86.

The contracting agent of defendant who had agreed to send plaintiff's trunk to his home agreed to be responsible for it when it had been apparently lost, which induced the plaintiff to cease looking for it. The defendant was held liable. McKay v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., 17 Misc. 396.

Defendant's servants were authorized to remove obstructions to the replacing of glass in windows. They unnecessarily and against instructions interfered with a gas fixture, causing an explosion. McCauley v. Huthoff, 20 Misc. 97.

(c). WHEN HE IS NOT ACTING WITHIN SCOPE OF HIS EMPLOYMENT.

An expert and boy to accompany him were sent upon request of chairman of committee by defendant's firm, who were dealers in fireworks, to arrange the fixed pieces and take charge of the display. While expert was so engaged a member of said citizens' committee, which had the display in hand, told the boy to set off rockets, which the boy did so negligently as to injure a bystander. Held, that the act of the boy was not within the scope of his employment, and defendants were not liable. Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, aff'g 63 Hun, 8.

From opinion.—"There can be no doubt, I think, that such liability, would fall upon the members of the committee and persons in general charge and not upon the defendants. Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105; Olive v. Whitney Marble Co., 103 id. 292; Blake v. Ferris, 5 id. 48.

"The doctrine of respondent superior applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged with the result of some neglect or wrong, at the time and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose. Thorpe v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194; Ward v. New England Fibre Co., 154 id. 419."

Plaintiff, under contract to repair defendant's elevators, requested the elevator boy to operate it, while he used it as a platform from which to do plastering. He was not allowed to recover for injuries caused by the negligence of the elevator boy, who was held to be the servant of the plaintiff for the time being. Higgins v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 156 N. Y. 75; rev'g s. c., 11 Misc. 32.

Defendant's driver was directed to take his truck to the stable; but, meeting another of defendant's drivers, as a personal favor to him, undertook to carry the latter's trunk, and for this purpose took the truck in another direction from the stable, and, while so doing, ran over a traveler in the street. Defendant not liable. Caranagh v. Dinsmore, 12 Hun, 465.

Citing Sheridan v. Charlieb, 4 Daly 338; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343; Frazer v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 566; S. & R. on Negligence, 69 § 63; Story v. Ashton, L. R. 4 Q. B. 476.

A passenger engaged a buckboard to convey himself and wife from North Creek to Blue Mountain Lake, in the Adirondacks, of a person running a transportation line between such points. The passenger, annoyed by the dust created by teams in advance, asked the driver, if he would have to creep behind them and take their dust all day, and the driver said, "No, there is a place just beyond here where I can pass;" and the passenger said, "All right, you will do so then." At the fork of the road the driver pulled his horses to the left and urged them into a sharp trot, but the driver of the forward carriage started his horses on a run, and both teams raced, until, the road narrowing, the carriages collided, and the driver of the forward carriage was injured. The passenger was not liable. Richardson v. Van Ness, 53 Hun, 267.

The motorman of an electric car was alleged to have invited a boy to ride upon the car, because the boy had opened a switch for him. Motorman had been forbidden to allow anyone to ride upon such terms, and his act was not within the scope of his duty, nor was it for the company's interest or benefit, and the defendant owed the boy no duty as a passenger. Finley v. Hudson Electric R. Co., 64 Hun, 313, rev'g judgt. for plff; s. c., aff'd, 116 N. Y. 369.

Citing Connolly v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 114 N. Y. 104-109; Fleming v. B. C. R. Co., 1 Abb. N. C. 433; aff'd 74 N. Y. 618; Buckley v. N. Y. & H. R. Co., 43 Super. Ct. 187.

From opinion.—"The root of the master's liability for the servant's act is his consent, express or implied, and when his acts are done within the scope of his employment or for his master's benefit or in the furtherance of his interest, although not strictly in the line of his duty, yet, in the course of his employment, the master's assent is implied and he is accordingly held liable. Meelan v. Morewood, 52 Hun, 566; Mulligan v. N. Y. & R. B. R. Co., (129 N. Y. 506.) As in the case of Quinn v. Powers (87 N. Y. 535), where, although the servant departed from the strict line of duty, yet, what was done was in the line of his business, for the master's benefit, in furtherance of his interests, and, what the master might naturally have done, if he had been present."

Where a station agent, in the performance of a duty imposed upon him explodes torpedoes for the purpose of signaling a train, in the vicinity of a station where persons were standing on the platform, the railroad company is liable for injuries resulting therefrom, if such act was negligent and dangerous.

If in so doing the station agent went outside of his employment in order to effect a purpose of his own and exploded the torpedoes for his own amusement, and not for the purpose of signaling a train, the company would not be liable.

It rests upon the plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages caused by the explosion of a torpedo, to show that the person exploding the same was acting within the scope of his employment by the railroad company against which the action was brought. Smith v. The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, 78 Hun. 524.

A carpenter employed to install a refrigerating plant requested the operator of an elevator, whose duty was confined to its operation for the hotel and its guests, to assist him in his work by operating it for him while thus engaged. The operator was not acting within the scope of his employment but solely for the carpenter's accommodation. Jossaers v. Walker, 14 App. Div. 303.

A man in general charge of a cotton storage business gave instructions as to the use of the building in which the business was conducted to the employes of one having a contract to paint it. Such instructions were held not within the scope of his employment and his employer not liable for injury from a defective window bar he had declared to be safe. Wendler v. Equitable Life &c. Soc., 19 App. Div. 50.

Defendant's agent employed to collect installments of the purchase price of its machines, but expressly instructed not to touch or take the goods on non-payment, committed an assault and battery in seizing a machine on default in payment of one of the installments by a customer. Feneran v. Singer Man. Co., 20 App. Div. 574.

Defendant employed a person to keep lamps guarding a structure in the street lit, and to keep boys away from them. While boys were playing about the structure such servant threw stones at them. It was held that he was not acting within the scope of his authority. Kaiser v. McLean, 20 App. Div. 326.

Plaintiff did not sustain any relation to the defendant as passenger and he was arrested by one not in the latter's employ or acting for it, though after his arrest defendant's detective searched the plaintiff without direction or authority. In the absence of proof of authority it was held that the acts of defendant's agent were not necessarily within the scope of employment of a "detective." Penny v. New York Central &c. R. Co., 34 App. Div. 16.

But an allegation of unlawful arrest by defendant's "agent or servant" in its store was held good against demurrer. Fogarty v. Wanamaker, 60 App. Div. 433.

A packing clerk carried a person on defendant's elevator marked "for freight only," in violation of the rules and contrary to the course of his employment though twice before he had done so with defendant's consent. Such act was held not to be within the scope of his authority. Cogswell v. Rochester Mach. Screw Co., 39 App. Div. 223 (Affirming an order for a new trial, on which evidence was introduced showing authority in clerk to carry passengers. Verdict was directed for defendant and the appellate court sent the case back to be tried by a jury. s. c., sub. nom. Mormon v. Rochester &c. Co., 53 App. Div. 497).

Defendant's carpenter, employed to repair its gates, was standing near, and, when plaintiff, whose duty it was to raise them, attempted to do so, negligently struck a part of the machinery causing injury to the plaintiff. The complaint was dismissed upon the pleadings because it failed to state that the carpenter's act was done in pursuance of any design to repair the gates. Fisher v. Brooklyn Jockey Club, 50 App. Div. 446.

Defendant was in the habit of offering rewards for property lost by its customers, placing a certain employé in charge of such matters. Another employé having no connection with the former caused plaintiff's arrest upon information from an applicant for the reward. The defendant was not liable. Lubliner v. Tiffany & Co., 54 App. Div. 326.

Citing Mulligan v. New York &c. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 511.

Defendant's purser, after plaintiff had left its boat and given up her ticket, required her to enter a waiting room with another who charged her with theft and detained her there until she established her innocence. It was held that the acts were done after she had ceased to become a passenger, after his duties to defendant had ceased and were beyond the scope of the purser's employment. McKay v. Hudson River Line, 56 App. Div. 201.

Defendant's employé was sent to repair an electrical machine, used as motive power of a press. After completing the repairs, he took his tools to go home. While standing waiting for the train, the foreman of the establishment asked him to discharge the electricity with which the press had become stored. In attempting to do so the press was moved catching and injuring plaintiff's hand. The employé's act was not within the scope of his employment. Flinn v. World's Dispensary Med. Ass'n, 64 App. Div. 490.

Defendant's servant, in violation of express instructions, allowed a third person to ride a horse, which became ungovernable and injured plaintiff. Defendant was not liable. Long v. Richmond, 68 App. Div. 466.

(d). WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS ACTS OF AGENTS.*

1. NEW YORK CASES.

2. CASES IN OTHER STATES.

(a) Master liable.

(b) Master not liable.

A master is liable for the act of his servant done in the course of his employment, or in connection with, or furtherance of, some service committed to him by his master, and in such case it is immaterial whether the act be done willfully or recklessly (Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co., 73 N. Y. 543); illegally (Hoffman v. N. Y. Cent., etc. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 25; Wright v. Compton, 54 Ind. 337; McClung v. Dearborne, 134 Pa. St. 396), violently and regardlessly of safety (Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 64 N. Y. 129; Kline v. C. P. R. Co., 37 Cal. 400); brutally and with excessive force; McCann v. S. A. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 505; Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 62 id. 180; Levi v. Brooks, 121 Mass. 501; Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637.

But if a servant go beyond his employment, and, without regard to his service, act maliciously, or in order to effect some purpose foreign to his service, commit a trespass or injure another, the master is not liable. Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co., 73 N. Y. 543; Frazier v. Freeman, 43 id. 566. The same seems to be the case where the act, in its very nature, enforces the conviction that the servant was assuming to and did the act for himself. Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479; Henry v. Pittsburgh &c. R. Co., 139 Pa. St. 289; Peryea v. Thompson, 5 Hum. (Tenn.) 397.

This rule is subject to the qualification that the master is not liable for injury caused by servant, when the person injured has used words or acts calculated to arouse and bring on a personal altercation and collision with the servant. Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110. Scott v. Central Park, North & E. R. R. Co., 53 Hum. 414; New Orleans &c. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18.

1. NEW YORK CASES.

A principal neither authorizing nor ratifying a willful trespass committed by his agent is not liable therefor, nor is a corporation liable, although the act be authorized and sanctioned by the president and general agent thereof. In this case the plaintiff's boat was run into by the willful act of the captain of the defendant's boat. Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnpike Co., 2 N. Y. 479; 1 Hill, 480.

The master is not responsible for the willful injury committed by the servant in the transaction of his business unless he so act by the express or implied authority of his employer. The defendant's superintendent and clerks called a policeman into the store and directed the arrest and examination of a woman suspected of stealing goods. This was done without the knowledge or express or implied authority of the master, and he was not liable.

Presumptively a servant is not authorized to do that which the master if present, would not be authorized to do. Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381.

Griswold v. Haven, 25 N. Y. 526; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343; Bank v. Baker, 26 Atl. Rep. (Md.) 867.

The plaintiff's intestate was shot and killed by "M" while in the employment of the defendant, and while the defendant, together with "M" and another servant, were endeavoring under claim of right to enter upon the premises of the intestate, and there was no evidence that the fatal shot was fired by the express direction, or assent, of the defendant.

In an action to recover damages for causing the death it was erroneous to refuse to charge the jury that if they believed that "M" fired the shot with the premeditated design to effect death the defendant was not liable for the act. Fraser &c. v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 566.

See Davis v. Houghtellin, 33 Neb. 582.

See, also, Denver &c. R. Co. v. Harris, 2 Pac. R. (N. M.) 369.

The provisions of title 13, chap. 20, part 1, of the Revised Statutes (1 R. S. 695), entitled "of the law of the road and the regulation of public stages," are not applicable to street railways, and a street railway company is not liable, under section 6 of said title, for the willful act of one of its employés.

At common law the liability of the owner of a vehicle, used for the transportation of persons for injuries resulting from the acts of his driver extends to those injuries only which result from the driver's misjudgment or negligence, while engaged for the owner in his vocation as a driver. Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 344, 345; Hibbard v. The N. Y. & E. R. R. Co., 15 N. Y. R. 467; Mali v. Lord, 39 id. 383; Fraser v. Freeman, 43 id. 566; Isaacs v. Third Avenue R. R. Co., 47

N. Y. 122. Whitaker v. Eighth Avenue R. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 295, rev'g 5 Robt. 650, and judg't for pl'ff.

A brakeman, in the course of his duty of keeping the cars free from intruder, kicked a boy, who fell from the car against a pile of wood, and was thrown under the car and injured.

The defendant was liable. Rounds v. D., L. & W. R. Co., 64 N. Y. 129; 3 Hun, 329.

Johnson v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 58 Iowa, 348.

The plaintiff attempted to cross the platform of a car standing at the crossing and was thrown off by the driver. The complaint alleged that the driver did it willfully, but the court held, on demurrer, that the driver was acting as a "servant and agent in the employment of the defendant" when the act was done, and the demurrer was overruled on the ground that it may have been a part of the servant's duty to keep the platform clear. Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 62 N. Y. 180.

In an action for injuries, alleged to have been sustained through the wrongful act of defendant's servant, plaintiff's evidence tended to show that a driver of one of defendant's ice carts, while engaged in the performance of his duties, and in the course of his employment, carelessly and recklessly drove his cart against plaintiff's carriage, causing the injury complained of. Upon the cross-examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses, whose direct examination tended to show gross carelessness on the part of the driver, the witness, in answer to a question as to whether the driver drove into plaintiff's carriage purposely, answered: "It seems so; it looks like it." The question being substantially repeated, the witness answered: "Well, I could not tell." Plaintiff also offered in evidence a former answer—amended pleadings having been subsequently served—which contained an admission that defendant's servant, then in its employ as driver of an ice cart, "willfully and not negligently nor carelessly, drove said ice cart against the carriage of the plaintiff." Plaintiff was nonsuited. Held, error; that the first answer of plaintiff's witness, above stated, was but the expression of an opinion upon a fact to be determined by the jury, not by the witness; but that as an opinion its effect was destroyed by the last answer; that plaintiff was not estopped from questioning the allegation of the answer, that the act was done "willfully;" also, that the answer did not exclude all presumption of liability, as the act may have been done "willfully," and yet, in the course of the employment, and so have made defendant liable. Mott v. Consumers' Ice Company, 73 N. Y. 543, rev'g nonsuit.

From opinion.—"In general terms, if the servant misconducts himself in the course of his employment, his acts are the acts of the master, who must answer for them. There are intimations in several cases of authority, that for the willful acts of the servant the master is not responsible. McManus v. Crickett, 1 East. 106; Hibbard v. N. Y. & E. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 455; Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343. But these intimations are subject to the material qualification, that the acts designated 'willful,' are not done in the course of the service, and were not such as the servant intended and believed to be for the interest of the master. In such case the master would not be excused from liability by reason of the quality of the act. Limpus v. London Gen'l Omnibus Co., 1 H. & C. 526; Seymour v. Greenwood, 6 H. & N. 359; affirmed 7 id. 355; Shea v. Sixth Ave. R. Co., 62 N. Y. 180; Jackson v. Second Ave. R. Co., 47 id. 274. But if a servant goes outside of his employment, and without regard to his service, acting maliciously, or in order to affect some purpose of his own, wantonly commits a trespass, or causes damage to another, the master is not responsible; so that the inquiry is whether the wrongful act is in the course of the employment, or outside of it, and to accomplish a purpose foreign to it. In the latter case the relation of master and servant does not exist so as to hold the master for the act. Croft v. Alison, 4 B. & Ald. 590; Wright v. Wilcox, supra; Vanderbilt v. Richmond Turnpike Co., 2 Const. 479; Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381; Fraser v. Freeman, 43 id. 566; Higgins v. Watervliet T. Co., 46 id. 23; Rounds v. D., L. & W. R. R. Co., 64 id. 129; Isaacs v. Third Avenue R. Co., 47 id. 122."

The conductor of, or a brakeman upon, a railroad passenger train has authority to remove, in a lawful manner, a trespasser upon the platform of a car; whether the authority is conferred by the rules of the company or not, it is implied and is incident to his position.

The fact that the conductor or brakeman acts illegally in removing such a trespasser does not exonerate the company from liability, if his action be within the scope of his employment. In the absence of a finding or proof that the authority was exercised, as a mere cover for accomplishing an independent and wrongful purpose of his own, the company is liable, although the act was reckless and illegal and a breach of his duty to his master.

Plaintiff, a boy of eight years of age, jumped upon the steps of a car in a passenger train on defendant's road, and sat down upon the platform of the car; he was kicked from the car by a conductor or a brakeman, while the train was running at a speed of about ten miles an hour, and was injured. Recovery sustained. Hoffman v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 25; aff'g s. c., 14 J. & S. 526.

The plaintiff, while crossing the street, to get out of the way of a truck, crossed the platform of a car. The conductor kicked at him, and caused him to jump in front of another car coming in the opposite direction at unlawful speed, whereby he was injured. The defendant was liable. McCann Sixth Ave. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 505.

Plaintiff, boy of thirteen years, caught on the forward part of caboose; brakeman threw water in his face and the tendency of this was to make him fall, whereby he was injured. Question as to whether the act was improper and dangerous and done with the intention to remove the plaintiff from the train, and whether it caused the injury, was properly left to the jury. Verdict for plaintiff sustained. Clark v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. Co., 40 Hun. 605; s. c., aff'd, 113 N. Y. 670.

Boy stealing a ride on a train going ten miles an hour; brakeman ordered boy off and threw pieces of coal at him, one striking him on the head causing him to drop under the car and so receive injury. Defendant liable. Not necessary to show specific order to brakeman to keep boys off trains. Lang v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. Co., 51 Hun. 603; s. c., aff'd, 123 N. Y. 656.

In an action for the wrongful acts of his employé, the motive of the servant is immaterial.

Where, by the directions of a telegraph and telephone company, certain wires belonging to an electric power company have been cut from fixtures on housetops and removed therefrom without notice to the owner thereof, and without offering the electric power company a reasonable opportunity of collecting together and reclaiming such property, and in addition such wires were removed by the employés and servants of the telegraph and telephone corporation, the employer should be held liable therefor. The Electric Power Co. v. The Metropolitan Telephone and Telegraph Co., 75 Hun. 68; s. c., aff'd, 148 N. Y. 746.

Upon the trial of an action brought to recover damages resulting from personal injuries, it was shown that the plaintiff, a boy of eleven years of age, while riding upon a coal train of the defendant, fell off and received the injuries complained of. The plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that one of the brakemen threw coal at him, and as he was about to get off he was hit in the back of the neck by a large lump of coal thrown by the brakeman and knocked from the car. The complaint was dismissed on the ground that the brakeman was not shown to have any express authority from the defendant to remove intruders from the train, and that none could be implied from his position or the nature of his employment.

Held, that under the circumstances, the complaint was improperly dismissed and that the case in all its aspects was one to be determined by the jury. Lang v. The New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, 80 Hun. 275.

A person in the service of a company was engaged in making collections of money due it for property leased by such company, with instructions to retake the property from those who were in arrears, and were supposed to intend not to pay therefor.

Held, that when such person proceeded to take such property he was acting in the business of his employer, and in the scope of his employment;

That although the action to accomplish such purpose became willful on his part, his employers were not for that reason necessarily relieved from the consequences of his conduct, while so engaged, where it was prejudicial to others, for which such person would himself be personally liable. O'Connell v. Samuel, 81 Hun, 357.

It was held error to refuse to charge that "defendants are not liable for the acts of their agent or servant not done within the scope of his authority, or course of his employment," where the jury might have found that a lodging house porter's act of pushing plaintiff downstairs was not done pursuant to defendant's instructions to eject but was wholly a wanton act on his part when angered by plaintiff's conduct. Montgomery v. Sartirano, 16 App. Div. 95.

Defendant's trainer having authority to employ jockeys compelled plaintiff, a boy under the statutory age allowed for such employment, to ride a horse of a third person, against his will. The act imposed no liability on the defendant. Ray v. Keene, 19 App. Div. 147; s. c., aff'd, 160 N. Y. 706.

Defendant's agent went upon demised premises to repair the same and, in doing so, wantonly and willfully destroyed the tenant's property, maliciously delayed the work, instituted summary proceedings, &c. Defendant was liable for the acts as being done in furtherance of his interest though willfully and maliciously executed. Lery v. Ely, 48 App. Div. 554.

Defendant's watchman employed to protect his property was instructed to frighten away intruders by shooting the revolver with which he was furnished into the air. He, however, wantonly shot a boy who was not attempting to trespass. Defendant was not liable. Grimes v. Young, 51 App. Div. 239.

While it is the duty of a street car conductor to keep the car free of trespassers, and he has the right to put one off, he must do so in a proper manner, having regard to the safety of the person, and he has no right by demonstration and ejaculation, to produce fear, and thus cause such person to attempt to alight, if by so doing he unnecessarily expose him to the hazard of injury. Ansteth v. The Buffalo Railway Co., 9 Misc. 419; s. c., aff'd, 149 N. Y. 210.

Citing Clark v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. Co., 40 Hun, 605; 113 N. Y. 670; McCann v. Sixth Ave., R. Co., 117 N. Y. 595.

A street car driver refused repeated requests of a newsboy to stop the car so that he could alight, and ordered him to jump off, at the same time reaching for his whip. The boy then jumped from the car, fell and was injured. Contributory negligence was not predicable of the fact that he jumped from a moving car. Baber v. The Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad Co., 10 Misc. 109. (New York Common Pleas.)

Driver whipped up his team when he knew plaintiff, an infant, was attempting to mount it on the side. His employer was held not liable for injury to infant. Wright v. Wilcox, 19 Wend. 343.

If a boy, running alongside a car, not attempting to get on, should be kicked by a brakeman the railway company would be liable. Molloy v. New York &c. R. Co., 10 Daly, 453.

II. Banks and Other Agents for Collection, &c.

By receiving securities or commercial paper and assuming the collection thereof, or to do any act connected therewith, as presentation for acceptance, payment, protesting, etc., a person, whether acting simply as an agent, or a creditor, receiving the same absolutely or qualifiedly to apply on his debt, undertakes to do all that the law and general usage requires. Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 17. When the law or usage do not specifically fix the acts to be done, or the diligence requisite to be observed, the care and skill that should be employed, would be such as a man of ordinary care, diligence, and skill would use under the circumstances.

Where a draft is delivered to an agent to be presented for acceptance, only explicit and unequivocal acceptance is permitted, and the agent is liable for damage if, in the absence of such acceptance, he fail to give notice, as in the case of non-acceptance. Walker v. Bank of State of New York, 9 N. Y. 582.

Citing 1 R. S. 768, § 6: Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 382.

A bank receiving and upon good consideration assuming the collection of a bill or note, is liable for any default of its agents or correspondents in collecting or paying over the proceeds, or in charging the parties thereto, unless there be an agreement to the contrary.

A bank to which a bill is indorsed and transmitted by the owner for collection, and which has a special interest in the draft and proceeds, can sustain an action against an agent employed by it to collect the same for default in paying over the proceeds or in charging the parties.

It is sufficient that the draft was indorsed to such bank, and it agreed with the owner to collect it, to enable it to sustain the action against an agent, employed by it to collect the same. The Commercial Bank of Pennsylvania v. The Union Bank of New York, 11 N. Y. 204.

The defendants residing in Buffalo, being indebted to the plaintiffs doing business in New York, and having funds with J. K. P. & Co., in the latter city, drew their bill on the latter firm to the order of the plaintiffs to be presented for payment, and when paid to be applied in payment of the indebtedness. The plaintiffs, instead of insisting upon the money, received therefor the check of J. K. P. & Co. upon one of the banks in the same city, and delayed for a day to present the same, and meanwhile J. K. P. & Co. failed and check was not paid, although it would have been paid if presented forthwith. Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 171; 52 id. 545, aff'g non-suit.

See Syracuse &c. R. Co. v. Collins, 57 N. Y. 641.

From decision.—"There was no impropriety in the receipt of the check, and as the drawees were entitled to the draft upon payment of it, there is nothing in the case upon which fault could be imputed to the plaintiffs in the surrender of the draft or receipt of the check. Russell v. Hawkey, 6 T. R. 12; Howard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90; Byles on Bills, 16; Story on Bills, sec. 419; Chitty on Bills, 433, 434, ed. of 1833. If the check was worthless when given, or became worthless, before it could have been with reasonable diligence presented for payment, the loss would have fallen upon the defendants, and they would not have been discharged from their liability, unless the plaintiff had omitted to notify them in due time of the non-payment of the bill. There would, in such case, be no loss resulting from negligence.

But a check is payable instantly; and as between the drawer and drawee, the latter has, in analogy to the rules applicable to inland bills of exchange, until the day after the receipt of check to present it for payment, when drawn on a bank in the same place where given and received. Smith v. James, 20 W. R. 192; Harker v. Anderson, 21 id. 372; Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Ray. 928. But the duty of the plaintiffs to the defendants is not determined by that rule of commercial law. The rule has respect only to the contract, and liability of the parties to the instrument.

When a check is taken instead of money, by one acting for others, as was done by the plaintiffs, a delay of presentment for a day, or for any time beyond that, within which, with proper and reasonable diligence, it can be presented, is at the peril of the party thus retaining the check and postponing presentment, as between him and the persons in interest, whom he represents. If a custom can exist in law, and does not exist in fact, authorizing such delay at the risk of the absent principal, it must be shown; it cannot be presumed to exist without evidence. * * * *

By receiving the securities, and assuming the collection or as here, receiving the bill, and consenting to present the same for payment, a creditor undertakes to do all that the law requires to be done, to obtain payment, and if he fails in the performance of that duty the debtor is discharged. Canndye v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; Story on Bills, sec. 109. Laches, which would discharge the drawer or indorser of a bill of exchange, will as effectually extinguish the debt, for payment of which a bill or other negotiable instrument is transferred. Story on Bills, supra, and note; id., sec. 419, and note. This was decided in Kobbe v. Clark (Selden's Notes, October, 1853, p. 11). If by the acts or omission of the creditor, thus receiving negotiable instruments for collection, a loss occurs, it should fall upon him, who is the cause of the loss, rather than upon the distant and innocent debtor. Bradford v. Fox, 38 N. Y. 289."

A notary is the agent of a bank, and the latter is liable for his negligence in protesting paper, which it undertakes to do by receiving it for collection. Banks' liability may be varied by general usage, but not by practice adopted by the bank for its convenience. Direction to protest means to present and demand payment and if unpaid, to give notice thereof to the parties to be charged. The claim of the bank that it could not find maker was unfounded. Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 41 N. Y. 510.

The plaintiff sent the defendant a check for collection, on the second of the month the defendant sent the check to the bank on which it was drawn; it should have arrived on the third. It was lost and the defendant discovered the loss on the 16th and notified the plaintiff on the 18th. Defendant was negligent in not sooner discovering loss and notifying plaintiff. Shipsey v. Bowery Nat. Bank, 59 N. Y. 485.

See Mohawk Bk. v. Broderick, 13 Wend. 133, 138.

Defendant had in its hands certain U. S. bonds belonging to plaintiff; its cashier, in the spring of 1869, for a sufficient consideration, agreed to exchange the same for registered bonds. This the bank neglected to do, and in November, 1869, the bonds were stolen. The defendant was liable. Yerkes v. The National Bank of Port Jervis, 69 N. Y. 383, aff'g judgment for plaintiff.

From opinion.—"If the plaintiff had delivered her bonds to the bank for collection, and the bank had agreed to collect them, no one would deny that the agreement would have been valid. If after such an agreement, the bank had kept the bonds for an unreasonable time, until they were stolen, or had lost them, or rendered them worthless by its culpable negligence, it would have become liable to the plaintiff for their value. Smedes v. Utica Bank, 20 J. R. 372; s. c., 3 Cow. 662; Bank of Utica v. McKinster, 11 Wend. 473; Walker v. Bank of State of N. Y., 9 N. Y. 582; Montgomery Co. Bank v. Albany City Bank, 7 id. 459."

The plaintiff sent the defendant, its correspondent in New York, a sight draft on C. P. & Co., for collection; the same was presented the same day and check given, which was the next day presented and refused as C. P. & Co. had in the meantime failed. The same day the check was returned and the draft received back and payment therefore demanded, and drawer notified of non-payment.

Held (1), That the defendant was negligent in not presenting the check on the day it was received, for, although C. P. & Co.'s account was overdrawn, the bank paid their checks until time of failure. Allen v. Suydam, 17 Wend. 368; Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 172, and 52 id. 545; distinguishing Turner v. Bank, etc., 4 Abb. (C. A. D.) 434; Burkhalter v. Second Nat. Bank, 42 N. Y. 538; Bank of Washington v. Tripplett, 1 Peters 25; West Branch Bank v. Fulmer, 3 Penn. 402; and (2), that nominal damages could only be awarded as it appeared that the drawer was good and that the draft could be collected of him. 1 Daniel on Negotiable Inst. sec. 329; *Borup v. Reversal was on question of damages. First National Bank v. Fourth National Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, rev'g 16 Hun. 332, and judgment for plaintiff.

"A" sent "B" a note payable at the latter's bank by one of its customers. Sunday, July 4th; on July 3d, "B" marked the note paid and sent its draft for same. On July 6th, "B," learning that the customer had failed, notified "A" that the draft had been sent by mistake, received it, presented and protested note and gave the endorser notice. Held, that an action against "B" for negligence in discharging the endorser by sending draft, &c., was proper, and that unless the draft was sent by mistake, of which there was not sufficient proof, the endorser was discharged and a recovery could be had. Whitmore v. City Bank of Rochester, 77 N. Y. 363.

The plaintiff sent a note to the defendant for collection and the defendant sent it to the Lowville Bank, where it was payable, and where the maker kept an account; the bank kept it until the next day and then sent its draft on New York in payment and failed the same day, and the draft was worthless and the plaintiff had immediate notice. The sending of the draft to the Lowville Bank was a proper demand of payment by mail (Heywood v. Pickering, 9 L. R. [Q. B.] 428; Prideaux v. Criddell, 4 id. 461; Bailey v. Bodinham, 16 C. B. [N. S.] 295; Hare v. Henley, 10 id. 65), and the draft was not such payment and the plaintiff had suffered no damage, as the maker was still liable and the Lowville Bank was not an agent of the defendant (The People v. The Merchant's Bank, 78 N. Y. 269). Indig v. National City Bank, 80 N. Y. 100, rev'g 16 Hun. 200, and aff'g non-suit.

From opinion.—"Where a note is payable at a bank, an entire failure to present it for payment, does not discharge the maker. Walcott v. Van Santvoord, 17 J. R. 248; Green v. Goings, 7 Barb. 652; Caldwell v. Cassidy, 8 Cow. 271. If the maker has not sufficient funds in the bank, the omission to present it is of no consequence. If he has funds, then he can plead it by way of tender, and is relieved from liability only for interest and costs. And even if the bank fails with the funds in its hands, this is no defense to the note. Ruggles v. Patten, 8 Mass. 180; Fenton v. Goudry, 13 East. 473; Turner v. Hayden, 4 Barn. & Cres. 1. The bank is, in such cases, regarded as simply the agent or depositary of the maker of the note, or acceptor of the bill, and he alone suffers by its failure, and his promise to pay is not discharged. In this respect only, a note or bill payable at bank differs from a check. Therefore, if there had been no presentment whatever, and the bank had failed with sufficient funds of the maker in its hands to pay the note, the maker was still liable."

On the second trial of last case there was evidence that a judgment of the court of Pennsylvania to the effect that the acceptance of the check was a payment of the draft and discharged the drawer, and such evidence was received properly and justified recovery against the defendant for the whole amount of the draft. First National Bank v. Fourth National Bank, 89 N. Y. 412, mod'g 24 Hun, 241.

A collecting agent is liable for the negligence of an attorney employed by him. Weyerhouse v. Dun, 100 N. Y. 150.

Bradstreet v. Everson, 72 Pa. St. 124.

On February 15th, C. & W. sent a sight draft "protest waived" to defendant for collection. The drawee accepted it February 21st, and promised to pay the following week, of which the drawers were notified. March 6th the drawer made an assignment. Defendants not liable to drawers for negligence. Crouse v. First National Bank, 137 N. Y. 383, rev'g judg't, for pl'ff.

A salesman for a cheese factory received a check for sales, and did not present it until after the failure of the drawer on September 11th. Individual patron had separate action against a salesman for neglect to present check. Soule v. Mogg, 35 Hun, 79.

Holders of bonds directed a bank to transmit the bonds to its correspondent with instruction to collect for them and their account. Upon suit by such holders, against the collecting bank for failure to collect full interest, the latter set up lack of privity of contract. It was held that the collecting bank was the holders' agent and not that of the transmitting bank, and was liable to them for such failure. Kelley v. Phenix National Bank, 17 App. Div. 496.

A correspondent of a bank to whom a draft had been transmitted for collection surrendered it and took another's draft, presumptively in payment, instead of either getting cash or protesting the draft and returning it to its owner. The draft in receipt not being paid, the bank was held liable for the correspondent's neglect, especially as the former notified the owner that his draft had been paid and the owner acted in reliance thereon. Kirkhan v. Bank of America, 26 App. Div. 110; s. c., aff'd, 165 N. Y. 132.

A bank negligently failed to collect a check, returned it to its holder protested, who thereupon without knowledge of the facts took it up. The bank in defense to a suit for recovery thereof set up that the check was deposited for cash. It was held, however, that whether it was deposited for cash or for collection, the bank was liable for its failure to present in time. Martin v. Home Bank, 39 App. Div. 498; s. c., aff'd, 160 N. Y. 190.

A bank receiving a note for collection failed to have it properly protested. The owner was permitted to recover the principal, interest and protest fee, but not the expense of a suit to test the liability of the indorser who had been released by the failure to protest. Hitchcock v. Bank of Suspension Bridge, 57 App. Div. 458.

Bank receiving from its cashier stock as security for loan to him is not chargeable with his knowledge that he was himself a pledgee and without authority to repledge it. Brady v. Mount Morris Bank, 65 App. Div. 212.

A bank, presented with a check for collection, forwarded it in the usual course of business, received the proceeds and notified the depositor that it was all right. Upon subsequent discovery that it had been raised, the bank was allowed to recover the amount checked against it. Oppenheim v. West Side Bank, 22 Misc. 122.

A rule, that it acted only as agent for a depositor for collection did not make a bank discounting a draft a mere collector as against an attaching creditor. American Trust &c. Co. v. Austin, 25 Misc. 454.

In absence of proof of actual damage only nominal damages are allowed. Lienau v. Dinsmore, 3 Daly, 365.

An agent is not liable for an omission to notify the endorser of a note deposited with him for collection, unless he is instructed to do so, or unless he omits to inform his principal of the default. Bank &c. v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206.

One attorney receiving from another a note for collection is liable for remitting proceeds to payee instead of to the other attorney. Lewis v. Peck, 10 Ala. 142.

Payee of a note, collected without authority, accepted, with knowledge, part of proceeds and a note in settlement. Collection was ratified. Hughes v. Neal Loan &c. Co., 97 Ga. 383.

Drafts deposited in a bank for collection were sent on to another bank for collection. Drafts which turned out to be worthless were received in return and credited to the depositor before learning of the collecting bank's insolvency. The collecting bank was depositor's agent and the latter had to bear the loss. Waterloo Milling Co. v. Kuenster, 158 Ill. 259; aff'g s. c., 58 Ill. App. 61.

A bank, receiving a bill of lading with a time draft attached for collection, in the absence of special instructions, is justified in surrendering the former upon acceptance of the latter. The presumption is that it is a sale upon credit and that the bill of lading is security for the acceptance. Commercial Bank v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 160 Ill. 401.

Defendant received checks for collection for plaintiff's accommodation and forwarded them in its usual course to its nearest correspondent, the drawee's bank, the only one in the place, which was known to plaintiff.

It was held that the collecting bank became the agent of the plaintiff and not of the defendant. Anderson v. Alton Nat. Bank, 59 Ill. App. 587.

Bank forwarded a check received for collection to a bank which was the clearing house for the locality of the drawee. Held, not negligent. Carlinville Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 78 Ill. App. 339.

An attorney who received notes for collection was held liable for their conversion by a fellow attorney whom he entrusted with their collection. Pollard v. Rowland, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 22.

An express company receiving a bill of exchange for collection, was held liable for the negligence of a notary, to whom the bill was sent for protest, in protesting it before maturity and discharging indorsers. American Express Co. v. Haire, 21 Ind. 4.

A bank, receiving from an indorsee a sight draft for collection, was held liable for failure to present it within a day after its receipt to a drawee living in the same town. Drawee's insolvency was no excuse; nor was the fact that the indorsee had recourse in any event against the drawer, who became insolvent during the delay. Citizen's Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 19 Ind. App. 69.

Bank was to receive a consideration for collection, but owner knew it had to be transmitted to another bank. Former bank was not liable for latter's default. Irwin v. Reeves Pulley Co., 20 Ind. App. 101; rehearing denied in 48 N. E. Rep. 601.

A bank holding inland draft for collection only, put it in its notary's hands for collection. He was not held its agent as such notary, though he was also assistant cashier. Having exercised due diligence in the selection of a notary, the bank was not liable for his failure to give notice of dishonor. First Nat. Bank v. German Bank, 107 Ia. 543.

A bank receiving a check for collection, sent it directly to the drawee bank, when there was another in the same place. The check was held for a day, returned unpaid and the drawee bank suspended. In a suit by holder against maker on the check, plaintiff was compelled to bear the loss. Anderson v. Rodgers, 53 Kan. 542; s. c., 27 L. R. A. 248.

Bank received note with instructions to collect and credit. It allowed an officer of the bank at which it was payable to do the collecting. The first bank was liable for his default. First Nat. Bank v. Craig, 3 Kan. App. 166.

Bank was authorized by its customers to employ another bank to do the collecting. Latter bank was customer's sub-agent. Beach v. Moser, 4 Kan. App. 66.

After presentment and notice of protest and nonpayment, a bank cancelled a check received for collection, taking another payable to order of its cashier, on which payment was refused. Bank was not liable, as no damage resulted from its act and there was evidence from which authority might be inferred. Citizen's Bank v. Houston, 98 Ky. 139.

A bank, receiving draft from indorsee, a depositor, with instructions to "collect and credit," was negligent in crediting it to the indorser, another depositor. Long v. Bank of Commerce, (Ky.) 38 S. W. Rep. 886.

An express company receiving a draft for collection and neglecting to present it, although having the opportunity to do so, until after drawers' insolvency, are liable for drawers' loss on the draft. Whitney v. Merchant &c. Ex. Co., 104 Mass. 152.

Instructions to a bank to deliver sealed papers pinned to a draft but only upon its payment are not disobeyed by allowing drawee to take them into his hands for examination, which results in his refusal to pay the draft. People's Nat. Bank v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 169 Mass. 129.

A bank cashed and credited forged checks payable "to the order of cash" drawn on plaintiff, which were paid through the clearing house. It made no inquiry as to genuineness of signatures and did not require an indorsement thereof. Held, that it was a bona fide purchaser and not liable to plaintiff. Dedham Nat. Bank v. Everett Nat. Bank, 177 Mass. 392.

A bank received a certificate of deposit for collection with instructions to forward it to its correspondent at B, who, its customers knew, was the drawer of the certificate and who was regarded as safe. Was not liable for loss. First Nat. Bank v. Citizen's Savings Bank, 123 Mich. 336.

Bank sent draft received for collection direct to the drawee's bank. Was liable, though there was no other bank of standing in the community, though it gave notice of nonliability for negligence of its agents, and though such action was customary among banks. Minneapolis Sash &c. Co. v. Metropolitan Bank, 76 Minn. 136; rev'g s. c., 15 Bkg. L. J. 468.

A bank holding a draft for collection surrendered it to drawee in exchange for latter's check, on another bank, which was worthless. Erroneous belief that drawee of check was solvent did not relieve collecting bank of liability. National Bank of Commerce v. American Exchange Bank, 151 Mo. 320.

Bank sent check for collection, directly to drawee's bank. Was liable, though there was no other bank in the place; and though, had it been sent to third person, the result might have been the same. American Nat. Bank v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 71 Mo. App. 451.

Suspecting its correspondent's insolvency at S, drawee bank's residence, a bank sent a check received for collection to M, twelve miles from S. Drawee failed on Saturday, the day the check was received at M. The check was not presented till following Monday. Remitting bank was liable. Herider v. Phoenix Loan Ass'n, 82 Mo. App. 427.

Purchase of a certificate of stock is within the scope of the authority of a bank cashier so to charge it with his knowledge of the condition of the stock. Farmer's &c. Bank v. Loyd, 89 Mo. App. 262.

Married woman sold her property and directed defendant's cashier to deliver deed upon receipt of the price, which she directed to be placed to her account. Bank was held liable for placing the proceeds to her husband's credit. Rhinchart v. People's Bank, 89 Mo. App. 511.

A bank having check for collection sent it to the drawee's bank when there was another bank in good standing in same town. Held, negligence. Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Sadilek, 50 Neb. 105.

Defendant bank received from plaintiff a draft to "collect and remit," but failed to promptly enforce collection, and returned the draft after having taken a conveyance of all of drawee's property with an agreement to pay debts, not including drawer's. Defendant had failed to perform its duties in good faith and was held liable to plaintiff. Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560.

A bank, receiving a note for collection, sent it to its correspondent with instructions to credit it, on payment. The latter failed, with its account to the former overdrawn. Former was liable to owner of note. First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. First Nat. Bank, 55 Neb. 303.

Once charged with notice through an officer, a corporation continues to be affected thereby, though the officer leave. U. S. Nat. Bank v. Forstedt, (Neb.) 90 N. W. Rep. 919.

A draft, indorsed for collection, was collected and credited to forwarding bank before its failure. Maker recovered of the collecting bank. The restrictive indorsement was notice of maker's title. Boykin v. Bank of Fayetteville, 118 N. C. 566.

See, also, Nat. Citizens' Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 119 N. C. 307; People's Bank v. Citizens' Bank, 119 N. C. 310.

A bank holding notes for collection took drafts instead of cash in payment. Owner was entitled to the draft or cash at his option. Indorsement for collection is notice that no title passed and that possession is for that purpose only. It seems that the relation of principal and agent changes to debtor and creditor after collection or where the bank was to credit the owner upon collection. National Bank of Commerce v. Johnson, 6 N. D. 180.

Correspondent bank, receiving notes for collection, knowing of debtor's financial difficulty, did not appraise remitting bank until after its own claims were secured and the notes had matured. Was liable for its failure to collect. Commercial Bank v. Red River Valley Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 382.

Indorsement for collection does not guarantee the genuineness of drawer's signature nor justify drawee in relaxing any diligence in that respect. Drawee cannot recover amount of forged check presented by indorser "for collection." First Nat. Bank of Belmont v. First Nat. Bank, 58 Oh. St. 207.

Custom of sending indorsed check direct to drawee for collection held not unreasonable. Kershaw v. Ladd, 34 Or. 375.

A collecting agency, receiving and remitting a claim to its own attorney, who collects the money and fails to pay it over, is liable for his neglect. Bradstreet v. Everson, 12 Pa. St. 124.

Riddle v. Hoffman's Ex'r, 3 Pa. Rep. 224; Cox v. Livingston, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 103; Krause v. Dorrance, 10 Barr. (Pa.) 462; Rhines v. Evans, 16 P. F. Smith, 192.

A drawee bank paid the amount of a draft indorsed to another bank "for collection" to the clearing house which applied it to a debt due from the indorsee bank to the clearing house committee. It was not a payment to the owner of the draft and no defense to an action against the drawee bank. Crane v. Fourth Street Nat. Bank, 173 Pa. St. 568.

A bank in collecting a check received, instead of money, a check, which became worthless. Was liable for the loss. Farmer's &c. Nat. Bank v. Cuyler, 9 Pa. Dist. 539.

Note payable on Sunday was received for collection with instruction to protest in case of non-payment which was done on the Thursday following. Though too late to hold indorser, the bank had used due diligence in view of the statute law in the state, relating to holidays and days of grace. Morris v. Union Nat. Bank, 13 S. D. 329.

Custom of bank, receiving draft for collection, to take acceptor's check on another bank to which it presents it the next forenoon, was held reasonable. Savings Bank v. Nat. Bank, 98 Tenn. 337.

Bank, receiving checks on a bank in another town for collection after business hours, sent them the next day in its usual course to its correspondent in a more distant town. Was held not negligent. Givan v. Bank of Alexandria, (Tenn.) 52 S. W. Rep. 923.

A bank with a draft for collection sent it directly to drawee. Though negligent, it was held not liable, because the result would have been the same if the draft had been sent to a third party. First Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 318.

Bank was not liable for holding draft received for collection without protest, where that had become the custom of the parties. First Nat. Bank v. St. Charles Sav. Banks, (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. Rep. 768.

A correspondent of a bank receiving a note for collection becomes, in the absence of express authority, the agent of the latter and not of the owner of the note. State Nat. Bank v. Thomas Man. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

From opinion.—"The main question in this case is whether a bank receiving paper for collection is responsible for all subsequent agents employed in the collection of the paper." * * * * "In a majority of the states, including Massachusetts as leader, the liability is denied, the sub-agents being treated as sub-agents of the owner of the paper, and not the agents exclusively of the bank first receiving it for collection. Mechem on Agency, sec. 514, where the states are given and the authorities cited. But in New York and several other states the opposite rule has long prevailed, the bank receiving the paper for collection, nothing further appearing, being treated as an independent contractor, and the subsequent agents as its own and not the sub-agents of the owner. In the Supreme Court of the United States, too, the decisions appeared for a long time to be in conflict; but in the case of Exchange National Bank v. Third National Bank, 112 U. S. 276, the question came squarely before that learned court, and, in an able opinion by Justice Blatchford, reviewing previous decisions, the New York rule, which was also the English rule, was finally adopted. The decision of the case at bar was made in conformity to the rule so adopted and we approve it."

See, also, Schumacher v. Trent, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 17.

A bank, though doing business in a temporary structure, owing to a fire, undertook collection of plaintiff's notes. Was liable for failure to give notice of dishonor. Merchant State Bank v. State Bank, 94 Wis. 444.

III. Executors, Testamentary Trustees.

An executor or trustee is not a guarantor for the safety of the securities which are committed to his charge. He is only liable for his own acts and not for the negligence or waste of his co-executor or co-trustee (Ormiston v. Olcott, 84 N. Y. 339), unless he shall have intentionally or otherwise contributed to it, or unless it appears that he had knowledge of, or assented to, the acts done, or had notice which should excite his suspicion and put him upon inquiry. Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329; McKim v. Aulbach, 130 Mass. 481.

And only in such case where he had the means of preventing or guarding against such waste; but he is bound to exercise due caution and vigilance in respect to the approval of, or acquiescence in, the acts of his associates. Earle v. Earle, 93 N. Y. 104.

Where an executor enables by his act funds to go into the hands of his co-executor, but for which he would not have received them, and the latter wastes them, the former is liable; but this does not arise when such executor is merely passive and fails to obstruct the collection or receipts of such funds by his co-executor. Croft v. Williams, 88 N. Y. 384; Darnaby v. Watts, 13 Ky. L. R. 457.

And so, when he allows his co-executor or a third person to entirely manage the estate, he is liable for their conduct. Earle v. Earle, 93 N. Y. 104.

An executor or trustee is liable for loss occurring through violation of a statutory duty, as in the case of an unauthorized investment. King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76.

Generally he must use the prudence and diligence that a man of discretion and intelligence would employ in his own affairs. McCabe v. Fowler, 84 N. Y. 314.

This would require active diligence in the collection of a debt to the estate. Harrington v. Keteltas, 92 N. Y. 40.*

(a). INVESTMENT.

Where the interest upon certain legacies were, by the terms of the will, to be applied by the executors, so far as required, to the maintenance and education of the legatees during their minority, and the principal, with any accumulations thereon, to be paid to them severally on their coming of age, and the executors, upon whom the trust was imposed, invested the funds in railway and bank stocks, the legatees, upon coming of age, were not bound to accept such investments, but had the right to call upon the executors to pay over the whole amount of their legacies and interest thereon.

The law, in this state, imposes upon trustees, holding trust funds for investment for the benefit of minor children, to be supported from the income accruing therefrom, the duty of placing them in a state of security, of seeing that they are productive of interest, and of so keeping them, that they may always be subject to future recall, for the benefit of the cestui que trust.

The investment of such funds by a trustee in canal, bank, insurance, railroad or other stocks of private corporations, is a violation of his duty and the obligation of his trust.

As to moneys held upon trusts of this kind, it is not according to the nature of the trust, nor within any just idea of prudence, to place the principal of the fund in a condition in which it is necessarily exposed to the hazard of loss or gain, according to the success or failure of the enterprise in which it is embarked and in which, by the very terms of the investment, the principal is not to be returned at all. King v. Talbot, 40 N. Y. 76.

The executor in care of the securities, entrusted to him, must use the care, prudence and diligence that a man of discretion or intelligence would, in general, employ in his affairs, and when he left securities with same person, as the testator had done, the executor was not negligent. McCabe v. Fowler, 84 N. Y. 314.

Distinguishing Walton v. Walton, 1 Keyes, 18; 2 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 428.

*NOTE.—As to trustees other than testamentary trustees see post p 68.

Trustee who invests funds beyond his jurisdiction does so at the peril of being held responsible for the security of the investment. Ormiston v. Olcott, 84 N. Y. 339.

See, also, Matter of Denton v. Sanford, 103 N. Y. 607.

Where executors are by will only made liable for willful default, misconduct or neglect, proof of negligence is not sufficient. Courts will in such case regard with leniency whatever is done in good faith. The complaint charged negligence in investing funds. An unpaid tax in real estate is not a violation of prohibition against investing on unincumbered real estate. (Chesterman v. Eyland, 81 N. Y. 398; s. c., 74 id. 452.) Crabb v. Young, 92 N. Y. 56.

See Paulding v. Sharkey, 88 N. Y. 432; Glacius v. Fogel, 88 id. 434.

An executor was held liable for the loss of interest in funds invested to accommodate his relatives, in contravention of the classes specified by statute. Matter of Vandervort, 8 App. Div. 341.

Executors, vested with discretionary powers, found at the time of their appointment the estate property depreciated in value, and, in the honest and reasonable exercise of their discretion, they held it for a rise. They were not chargeable with a further loss in value or with the expense attending its holdings in the meanwhile. Matter of Hosford, 27 App. Div. 427.

See, also, Matter of Weston, 91 N. Y. 502.

A life tenant consented to the unauthorized investment by the testamentary trustee. It did not affect the latter's liability to the remainderman therefor. Matter of Talmage, 32 App. Div. 10; s. c., aff'd, 160 N. Y. 704.

Executors with a discretionary power as to investment were not required to change the investment to trust securities, and were not liable for losses through investment, where their discretion was not abused but honestly and reasonably exercised. Lawton v. Lawton, 35 App. Div. 389.

See, also, Matter of Hall, 48 App. Div. 488; Dunklee v. Butler, 30 Misc. 58.

Executors having mortgages in Minnesota taken by their testator, on which there had been a default in interest, foreclosed them for interest only, instead of for principal and interest, relying on the advice of the testator's confidential agents there and that of their own local counsel. Having acted in good faith, they were not liable for losses resulting from a panic which occurred shortly after. Matter of Ball, 55 App. Div. 284.

Executors, finding no opportunity to invest in mortgage securities, entered into an agreement with a bank to purchase bonds for $121,500, paying $21,500 thereon and giving note with the bonds as security with an additional agreement for repurchase on the part of the bank. The interest on the bonds offsetting the interest on the notes. The beneficiaries were not entitled to object to such a transaction where it resulted in shielding the estate from loss. It was also held that they were not chargeable with interest on an amount they kept on open account, no larger than necessary for the purposes of actual administration expenses. Matter of Johnson, 57 App. Div. 494; s. c., modified on another point, 170 N. Y. 139.

Executors, directed to convert land and invest the proceeds, were not warranted, after 16 years of increasing value, to hold it still longer for a further increase. Matter of Fergo's Estate, 20 Misc. 137.

A temporary administrator failed to deposit funds. Was charged with the interest they would have earned with a trust company. Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263.

So where conservator of lunatic failed to invest trust funds. Re Thomas's Estate, 26 Col. 110.

Trustee, who invested in stocks and bonds of a private corporation and in his own name to avoid the delay of an application to sell them, was chargeable with interest on the funds less dividends received with interest on such investments. Acquiescence by cestui que trust did not relieve him of his duty. White v. Sherman, 168 Ill. 589; aff'g s. c., 62 Ill. App. 271.

Administrator was not careless in following out testator's desire to continue an investment in bank stock where he failed to withdraw it, merely because the bank surrendered its charter as a national bank and became a private one. Penn v. Folger, 17 Ill. App. 365.

Executor under a will which provided that the money should be held by him, without giving directions for investment, used it for seventeen years pending time for distribution instead of investing it. Was chargeable with interest. Re Estate of Young, 97 Iowa. 218.

Direction to invest and pay interest. Executor not liable for the legal rate, but only such interest as he received. Fitzgerald v. Paisley, 110 Iowa, 98.

Executor who held funds subject to payment to legatees and who did not and could not use or make a profit out of them, was not chargeable with interest. Briggs v. Walker, 102 Ky. 359.

The investment of trust funds in second mortgages or in notes or shares of a business corporation with no surplus or working capital but working wholly on credit, is not in the exercise of sound discretion. Mattocks v. Moulton, 84 Maine, 545.

A testamentary trustee of a fund bequeathed was also the executor of the estate. As executor he sold part of the estate for an exorbitant price taking back purchase money mortgages in which the trust fund was invested. The property, not bringing the face of the mortgages, he was liable as trustee for the difference, by reason of his negligence in investing in inadequate security. Gilbert v. Kolb, 85 Md. 627.

Trustees were not charged with indiscretion, where, with the proceeds of United States bonds, they purchased bonds of a small road guaranteed by two larger roads which it connected, where such investment was regarded as desirable by intelligent investors and eventually produced a larger income than the original. Nor were they so charged for retaining an investment their testatrix had made, merely because it declined in market value and their judgment as to its ultimate value was at error. Green v. Crapo, (Mass.) 62 N. E. Rep. 956.

Honesty is no excuse for irregularity in investments. St. Paul Trust Co. v. Strong, 85 Minn. 1.

Funds were invested in a mode not authorized and were depleted. Executors were held liable. Nyce's Estate, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 254.

See, also, Leslie's Appeal, 63 Pa. St. 355; Estate of Merkle, 131 id. 584.

Loan was made by authority of the court and with consent of beneficiaries, on their property, which was their home. Testamentary trustee was not chargeable with the depreciation of the property, especially as its sacrifice would deprive them of a home. Re Old's Estate, 176 Pa. St. 158; aff'g s. c., 13 Lanc. L. Rev. 98.

Will provided that the testamentary trustee might retain testator's investments if he deemed best. Was not liable for loss resulting from the honest exercise of his discretion in retaining them. Re Bartol's Estate, 182 Pa. St. 407.

See, also, Parker v. Glover, 42 N. J. Eq. 559; Pope v. Matthews, 18 S. C. 444.

Trustee, in pursuance of a family arrangement, invested in land of the beneficiaries' father as a subsequent incumbrance and allowed it to remain for nineteen years. He was not liable for depreciation below first mortgage, especially as it did not appear that the loan could ever have been collected. Re Lightner's Estate, 187 Pa. St. 237.

Part of a legacy given to a daughter-in-law in trust for her children was spent for purchase of property on which the family lived and the balance was loaned to the trustee's husband. The executrix and trustee exchanged receipts for nineteen years, no money passing. It was held that the executrix could not be charged with interest on such loan. Re Watson's Estate, 189 Pa. St. 150.

Trustee purchasing mortgages made personal examination of the property, which was highly recommended. Others testified that, at the time of the purchase, the property was amply secure. He was not liable for its subsequent depreciation through unknown causes; especially where he sold on demand of cestui que trust soon after buying it in on foreclosure. Nor was he chargeable because the property was out of the state, though in a suburb of his own city. In re Gouldey's Estate, 201 Pa. St. 491.

Trustee invested in third and fourth mortgages. Was chargeable with principal and interest due and unpaid. Makin's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. 126.

Trustee invested funds out of state to secure higher interest. Was chargeable for loss in principal and current domestic rate of interest on legal investments. Robert's Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. 303.

Trustee loaned on bond secured by mortgage on land poorly situated and marshy and which mortgage was more than its purchase price, and on note secured by pledge of oil stored out of state. Was chargeable with losses. Simes's Estate, 9 Pa. Dist. 31.

Trustee is liable for loss, where he either uses the fund itself, or allows his sureties to have control of it; or loans it upon notes or other personal security. Wolgemuth's Estate, 16 Lanc. L. Rev. 229.

Testamentary trustee in contravention of his authority, reconverted funds back into real estate. He was liable for a breach of duty though it might be regarded judicious as a private venture. Re Horne's Estate, 28 Pittsb. L. J. (N. S.) 443.

If there is any delay in settling the estate it is the duty of the administrator to invest the fund or seek the advice of the court. In re McGonigle's Estate, 31 Pittsb. L. J. (N. S.) 27.

Citing Bruner's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 46.

Trustee took a confession of judgment as security instead of a bond and mortgage as directed by the court and prevented the issuance of an execution, whereby lien was cut down to ten years. Was not liable for loss by limitation as his successor could have extended the lien indefinitely. Rush v. Steele, 93 Va. 526.

(b). COLLECTION.

Where administrators sold the leasehold estate of the intestate and took a promissory note of the purchaser on credit, without security, and purchaser became insolvent before completing payment. King v. King, 3 Johns. Ch. 552.

Ackerman v. Emott, 4 Barb. 626.

An executor having notice that there is a debt due the estate, is bound to active diligence for its collection; he may not wait for a request of the distributees.

In case the debt is lost through his negligence he becomes liable as for devastavit. Williams on Ex'rs. vol. 2, p. 1636 (5th Am. ed.); Shultz v. Pulver, 3 Paige, 184; 11 Wend. 366.

It seems, that if the case is one of such doubt, that an indemnity is proper, he must at least ask for it; and at any rate he takes the risk of showing that the debt was not lost through his negligence.

The statute of limitations does not begin to run in favor of an executor, as against a claim for damages occasioned by his negligence in collecting a debt due the estate from the time of the probate of the will, but at best only from the time of the loss. Harrington v. Keteltas, 92 N. Y. 40.

Coon, in 1855, recovered judgment which became a lien on Conover's farm, worth about $4,000, subject to prior liens for more than this sum. Coon died in 1860; plaintiff, administratrix, put matter in the hands of an attorney, who issued execution and collected small amounts. Liens of prior judgment expired and left Coon's judgment first lien. On accounting, the administratrix was personally held liable for negligence in not collecting judgment. Hollister v. Burrill, 14 Hun, 291.

Citing: Ruggles v. Sherman, 14 John. 446; McRae v. McRae, 3 Bradf. 199; Shultz v. Pulver, 3 Paige, 182; 11 Wend. 361; Redfield's Law & Practice, 250; Williams on Ex'rs, 15, 43. McLellan's Probate Practice, 213.

A trustee failed to collect a debt admitted to be due by one apparently solvent, and was so indifferent to his trust that he delivered over the management thereof to others. His executor was required to respond for the amount lost through his negligence. Davis v. Kerr, 3 App. Div. 322.

A testamentary trustee failed to collect rents for four years, where the tenants could have been evicted and the premises rented to those who could pay. He was held chargeable therewith; but he was not chargeable with rents uncollected for three months in a vicinity where it was exceedingly difficult to rent and where there was some hope of payment; the latter being a reasonable exercise of his discretionary power. Matter of McIntyre, 24 App. Div. 167.

Executors did not attempt to collect a note which it appeared they might have collected. They were required to show that efforts to collect would have been useless and the fact of having relied upon an attorney's advice did not aid them. But it was otherwise where they had exercised some diligence in collecting a portion of other notes and it appeared that the rest probably could not have been collected. Matter of Hosford, 27 App. Div. 421.

Executors were held accountable for rent actually received but which they could not have compelled those occupying the premises to have paid. Bruckerhoff v. Farias, 52 App. Div. 256; s. c. aff'd, 170 N. Y. 427.

Testator gave property causa mortis. Though in advanced age and suffering from disease, there were reasonable grounds for supposing she had testamentary capacity. Executor was not liable for failure to recover it. Matter of Hall's Estate, 16 Misc. 174.

Executor was allowed in full, payment to general creditors by offsetting claims due, pursuant to an agreement with deceased; but only pro rata for other settlements. Matter of Van Houten, 18 Misc. 524.

Executrix made no attempt to collect a note of a solvent debtor which she was aware of and which was the estate's main asset. Was chargeable therewith. Matter of Wilbur, 27 Misc. 126.

Executor not chargeable with amount of note due the estate from his attorney of which he had no notice, actual or constructive, except so far as in legal theory he is chargeable with his attorney's knowledge. Matter of Guldenkirch, 35 Misc. 123.

Neglect to enforce a security given upon a note rendered executor liable. Willis v. Willis, 16 Ala. 652.

An administratrix was allowed interest on a mortgage, where the mortgaged lands could not be sold without sacrifice. Was not chargeable with rents which could not be collected. Patapsco Guano Co. v. Ballard, 107 Ala. 710.

Reliance on attorney's advice did not excuse breach of duty. Pryor v. Davis, 109 Ala. 117.

Executor failed to collect claim while debtors were solvent. An order authorizing a compromise did not excuse him as his neglect caused the necessity therefor. Fraley v. Thomas, 98 Ga. 375.

Administrator sold property for more than its value. Was liable for the balance of the purchase price lost through negligence though he had collected its actual value. English v. Horn, 102 Ga. 972.

An administrator must not attempt to collect bad debts; but this does not relieve him of the duty to pursue apparently good one though he may know of a possible defense. He should leave that to the debtor. Egan v. Clark, 87 Ill. App. 246.

Settlement by administrator of a claim for the death of his intestate without an order of court upheld. Brink's Exp. Co. v. O'Donnell, 88 Ill. App. 459.

See, also, Cogswell v. Railroad Co., 68 N. H. 192; Parker v. Steamboat Co., 17 R. I. 376.

Administrator was not chargeable with failure to collect funds in another state, not being under a legal duty to do so. Purdy v. Purdy (Ky.) 42 S. W. Rep. 89.

Executor failing to sell notes or enforce a judgment not liable in absence of proof of actual damage to the estate. Lippert v. Lippert, 110 Iowa. 550.

Trustee permitted his attorney to collect nine or ten different sums at intervals in four years without attempting to recover the same from him. Held, that, as such action might be susceptible of explanation, it was error to sustain a demurrer to trustee's answer. McRoberts v. Carneal, (Ky) 46 S. W. Rep. 442; s. c. modified, 51 id. 800.

Executors negligently failed to collect a debt owing to decedent by distributee. Was held liable therefor. Hoffman v. Armstrong, 90 Md. 123.

Where executors, who are presumed to have the information at hand, report that certain debts are doubtful or desperate, the court cannot hold that they were collectible in the absence of positive evidence of the fact. Wrightson v. Tydings, 94 Md. 358.

Where the administrator took confederate money in good faith, in payment of sales of real estate, did not use it for his own purposes and could not pay it out, he was not chargeable. Moffatt v. Loughridge, 51 Miss. 211.

See, however, Webster v. Whitworth, 49 Ala. 201.

Executrix failing to collect a claim on advice of counsel whose opinion at the time seemed well founded, was held not liable. Scudder v. Ames, 142 Mo. 187.

Administrator was not charged with a debt due from him where he was insolvent throughout the administration. McCoy v. Allen, 9 Oh. C. C. 607.

Where an executor shows that he received all that a note and mortgage sold by him was worth, he cannot be charged with its face value. Warren v. Hendricks, (Or.) 66 Pac. Rep. 607.

Executor is liable, if testator's estate becomes subject to payment of debt for which testator was surety, when diligence would have collected it of the principal debtor. Chamber's Appeal, 11 Pa. St. 436.

When debt of co-executor was not secured as directed by testator's will and he died leaving the same unpaid, executor was held responsible. Meegand's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 471.

Executor is answerable when debts are not collected promptly. Charlton's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 473.

Shaffer's Estate, 46 Pa. St. 131; Powell v. Hurt, 31 Mo. App. 632; Searborough v. Watkins, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 540.

An executrix received goods from a debtor to the estate, in payment of an individual debt; was chargeable therewith as her first duty was to the estate. Re Evans' Estate, 1 Pa. Super Ct. 37.

Trustee causing delay and expense by willfully settling bad claims and resisting good ones was chargeable with the costs of an accounting. Moore's Estate, 15 Lane. L. Rev. 28.

Trustee never received anything from his predecessor and it was useless to attempt to collect anything. He was not liable to account, especially after sixteen years. In re Wade's Estate, 18 Lane. L. Rev. 91.

An executor who paid special legacies out of funds charged with the payment of debts, was chargeable therewith at demand of creditors and with interest from the time the estate should have been closed. Davis v. Jackson, (Tenn.) 39 S. W. Rep. 1067.

Executor was not charged with interest on amount collected as executor within the statutory period of settlement, but was charged therewith, on amounts collected individually but never accounted for. Hill v. Fly, (Tenn.) 52 S. W. Rep. 731.

It was shown that an attorney of the intestate received a larger sum than the administrator accounted for; but it was not shown that the latter received more than that. Administrator was not chargeable. Hanlon v. Wheeler, (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. Rep. 821.

Administrator entrusted a note to attorney for collection; note ran out and administrator could have made the money out of the attorney but waited until after he was insolvent. He was held liable for the debt. Mills v. Talleys, 83 Va. 361.

Davis v. Chapman, 83 Va. 67.

Failure of an administrator to seek redress from persons wrongfully withholding property of the estate notwithstanding a bond of indemnity given him by them, renders him liable. Holmes v. Bridgman, 37 Vt. 28.

McCloskey v. Gleason, 56 Vt. 264.

Executor failed to collect a note and rent which were collectible. He was chargeable therefor. But he was not chargeable with assets he failed to receive and it is not shown he was negligent in respect to. Was allowed expenses of contesting suits where he acted in good faith and by advice of counsel. Re Hall's Estate, 70 Vt. 458.

Administrator upon request to sue a controverted doubtful claim, demanded indemnity for costs. Was not chargeable where his demand was not complied with. Harris v. Orr, 46 W. Va. 261.

Executor failed to include his own note, due to the estate, in his accounting. Was held chargeable therewith. Robinson v. Hodgkin, 99 Wis. 327.

(c). DISTRIBUTION.

An executor overpaid testator's widow, but as the latter had supported minors who were otherwise unprovided for, at her own expense, which in justice should have been charged against the latter's shares, the matter was adjusted upon an accounting by presuming that such over-payment was properly advanced out of the estate to the widow in payment for such support. Matter of Braunsdorf, 2 App. Div. 73.

Executor, who paid claim barred by statute of limitations, and paid discount on loans to pay debts, which was made necessary by payment of legacies, was allowed for neither, and was held personally liable to creditors for the devastavit caused thereby. Matter of Oosterhoudt, 15 Misc. 566.

Administrator was allowed for mourning attire for widow and minor daughter as part of funeral expenses. Matter of Wachter, 16 Misc. 137.

Beneficiary of a trust paid it to executor under a mistake of law. Latter was not liable after having distributed it to the legatees under the will. Haynes v. McKee, 19 Misc. 511.

A creditor was paid more than his share of the available assets. Administrator was liable for the amount above the amount he should have paid with trust company interest added. Matter of Philp, 29 Misc. 263.

Executors were not responsible for the honest and reasonable exercise of their discretion in the selection of securities sold to pay debts. Matter of Fidelity Loan &c. Co., 23 Misc. 211.

The court refused to review the acts of a testamentary trustee who had discretionary powers as to apportionment of the income, in the absence of the abuse thereof. Clark v. Clark, 23 Misc. 272.

Administrator of an insolvent estate paid execution in full which was in the sheriff's hands and was a lien upon the property before the intestate's death, though estate was afterwards declared insolvent. Was allowed therefor. Hullett v. Hood, 109 Ala. 345.

Lands were ordered sold, part for cash and part on time. Accounts were filed a few months after receipt of the deferred payments. Was not such a delay in accounting as to charge administrator with interest. Siniard v. Green, 123 Ala. 527.

Evidence considered insufficient to sustain a charge of negligence in an administrator for not bringing to trial a suit on which final settlement of the estate had depended from the time of the first account, a period of over seven years. Estate of Marre, 127 Cal. 128.

An ancillary administrator held funds for less than a year, making no profit on them except that incidental to depositing them subject to check in the bank of which he was president. He was not chargeable with interest especially where he was not requested to distribute. Dorris v. Miller, 105 Iowa. 564.

Administrator was not liable for payment of claim out of the prescribed statutory order where there was enough to pay all in full and no one is injured thereby. Masterson v. Canble, 15 Ind. App. 515.

Payment in good faith and on sufficient consideration of small sums though without proper demand was not negligence for which an administrator was chargeable. Beale v. Barnett, (Ky.) 64 S. W. Rep. 838.

Executor, who made payments without order of court to legatees, under a will subsequently set aside, was not allowed therefor. Succession of Heffner, 49 La. Ann. 407.

Executor is answerable for corrupt negligence in failing to oppose illegal claims against the estate. Parson's v. Mills, 2 Mass. 80.

And for negligence in failing to pay funeral expenses of intestate. Dampier v. St. Paul Trust Co., 46 Minn. 526.

Executors, who, within the year made a distribution without taking the required refunding bond, were held liable, notwithstanding confirmation of their accounts, on a judgment obtained ten years thereafter. Robin's Estate, 180 Pa. St. 630.

Release by a legatee of a third prevented charges against the executor as to that third being made for the benefit of the other two-thirds. Hertzler's Estate, 192 Pa. St. 531.

An executor who had improvidently paid a creditor was allowed pro rata out of a dividend. Taylor's Estate, 4 Pa. Dist. 691; s. c., 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 166.

Administrator sold property to pay debts subject only to the principal of a mortgage thereon, as the rate of interest was in dispute. He was allowed for the payment of accrued interest when the dispute was settled. Darrah's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. 178.

Executor was allowed for preferred debts paid before notice of adverse claim. Re Corcoran's Estate, 27 Pittsb. L. J. (N. S.) 112.

One hundred dollars was a reasonable allowance for a tombstone where the personal property did not exceed $2,000. Executors, who delivered property to the life tenant without security, were liable to remaindermen for life tenant's waste. Re Griffiths Estate, 1 Lack L. News, 311.

Administrator appointed in different states, was not liable to answer to a creditor in one state for a devastavit committed in another state. Bank of Wayne v. Fulton, (Tenn.) 19 S. W. Rep. 297.

Executor paid specific legacies without taking a refunding bond, while there were outstanding debts. Were chargeable though he had no notice of them. McGlaughlin v. McGlaughlin, 43 W. Va. 226.

(d). DISBURSEMENTS.

A guardian is not entitled to compensation for his services to the estate as an attorney, even though done at the request of his co-executor and the legatees and next of kin. Cottier v. Munn, 41 N. Y. 113.

See, also, Morgan v. Hannas, 49 N. Y. 667; Binsse v. Paige, 1 Keyes, 87.

The trial court found that an executor employed his partner as an individual to defend claims against the estate. It was held that while the partnership could make no charge for such service, the partner, if employed as an individual, might do so. Parker v. Day, 155 N. Y. 383; rev'g s. c., 12 Misc. 510.

An administrator took a second appeal after the first had reasonably settled the merits of the claim against him. It was held to be an imprudent administration of the estate as it was not reasonably certain that he would thereby relieve the estate of a claim greater than the cost of appeal, and he was refused allowance for attorney's fees. Gross v. Moore, 14 App. Div. 353.

Administrator was allowed to charge the estate with costs received by his attorney for collecting a claim, and credit himself therewith, but was not allowed for uncollectible claim paid by him, nor for attorney's services in investigating a relationship irrelevant to the suit. Matter of Van Buren, 19 Misc. 373.

Administrator was allowed for reasonable counsel fees on his settlement in court. Was not allowed counsel fees in improperly contested suits. Prior v. Davis, 109 Ala. 117.

An executor appearing and successfully contesting a will for the estate, and those interested under it, was allowed fees as an attorney. Alexander v. Bates, 127 Ala. 328.

Where attorney's services were rendered in an effort to improperly charge the estate in executor's favor their fees were not allowed. Noble v. Jackson, (Ala.) 31 South Rep. 450.

Administrator was charged with interest, where administration was unreasonably protracted for more than twenty-five years. Jacoway v. Hall, 67 Ark. 340.

Administrator of an insolvent estate was allowed for the cost of preserving a vineyard, though the estate was mortgaged. Estate of Smith, 118 Cal. 462.

Administrator was allowed for the care of stock till it could be advantageously sold. Estate of Fernandez, 119 Cal. 579.

For delay in settlement of estate administrator was not held for damages beyond interest on the balance in his hands. Estate of Armstrong, 125 Cal. 603.

Administratrix of an estate consisting of an insurance policy, contested by the company, employed counsel without order of the court on a contingent basis, where the fee was higher than it would have been in an unconditional employment. The fee was reasonable, and she was allowed therefor. Filbeck v. Davies, 8 Col. App. 320.

Executor believing himself entitled thereto retained fees for his services as attorney. Was chargeable with interest. Davidson v. Story, 106 Ga. 799.

Special administrator to defend a claim was not allowed costs and counsel fees on appeal, where it appeared that he had not acted in good faith or with prudence. Switzer v. Kee, 69 Ill. App. 499.

Trustee was not entitled to credit for expenses concerning litigation not necessary for the protection of the principal fund, and was charged with the amount of its depletion. Neritt v. Woodburn, 82 Ill. App. 649.

Where the estate had no interest in the litigation administrator was not allowed expenses therein. Cullen v. State, (Ind. App.) 62 N. E. Rep. 759.

See, also, Harris v. Coates, (Id.) 69 Pac. Rep. 475.

An attorney employed by an administrator refused to pay over money collected, claiming it for his services. Administrator, having exercised due care in selection of the attorney, was not chargeable. In re Beam, 8 Kan. App. 835.

Testamentary trustee, in anticipation of actual income, paid for the support and maintenance of the cestui que trust and was allowed reimbursement therefor, but was not allowed attorney's fees for an unsuccessful defense to an action by a creditor until after the debt was paid. Young v. Bullen, (Ky.) 43 S. W. Rep. 687.

Where an action should not have been brought in a fiduciary capacity, it was error to allow administrator a counsel fee. Thompson v. Thompson, (Ky.) 65 S. W. Rep. 457.

Fees for services of attorneys in suit to contest will were allowed, though will was set aside because made in violation of a prohibitory law. Fenner v. Succession of McCan, 49 La. Ann. 600.

Tutor of minor paid expenses in excess of revenue. The payments were not recommended at a family meeting and were repudiated by the minor at majority. The tutor was not allowed for them. Re Watson, 51 La. Ann. 1641.

Executor was not allowed counsel fees for contesting the will as it was not a part of his duty to contest it. Re Johnson's Estate, 4 Oh. N. P. 156.

Allowance of $550 in an estate of over $23,000 for four years' counsel services embracing among other things an abstract of title, two suits and the accounting; was not excessive. Re Wolfe, 4 Oh. N. P. 336.

Executrix purchased tombstone without consulting parties interested. Was allowed therefor. Titlow's Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. 40.

Executors made payments under mistake of law; were chargeable therewith. Monroe's Estate, 9 Kulp. 334.

(c). CARE OF ESTATE.

Negligence for administrator of an estate, twelve miles from a bank to keep money of estate in living rooms back of store, for twelve months. Cornwell v. Deck, 8 Hun, 122.

See, also, Chambersburg Savings Bank v. McLellan, 76 Pa. St. 203; Furman v. Coe, 1 Caines Cases in Error, 96.

The defendant, an administrator, negotiated the sale of the intestate's farm. A deed signed by the heirs was given and the administrator received price and placed it in a bank, which, two months thereafter, failed. The defendant was not acting as administrator and should have paid the money over directly (Mills v. Mills, 115 N. Y. 80), and he was not protected by the rule governing trustees and public officers depositing trust funds, without negligence, in a bank of good standing, in which case liability does not attach. (People v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477.) Harlow v. Mills, 58 Hun, 391; s. c. aff'd, 128 N. Y. 650.

Receipts for payments executed by legatees, though not under seal, reciting that, in consideration thereof, the executors were discharged from liability for claims against the estate, were deemed releases and bound those executing them, especially after the lapse of fifteen years. Matter of Hodgman, 11 App. Div. 344; s. c. aff'd, 161 N. Y. 627.

Executors having no power of sale as to lands, their account thereto was as agents of its owners and not executors of the estate. Matter of Hodgman, supra.

Testamentary trustee, directed to invest, deposited the funds in a trust company, and used a large amount for his private purposes. He was charged with legal interest on all; but was allowed advances for support of cestui que trust, made in anticipation of income that was not forthcoming, by reason of the lack of investments. Matter of Muller, 31 App. Div. 80.

Trustee compromised a suit for the recovery of a piece of property, which was claimed by another and his title to which he was advised by his counsel was doubtful, and which was of no practical utility, as it had been set aside for a street and would have to be kept open for light and air. His rents from certain properties were small; but the premises were out of condition, in poor locality and it was not probable that any diligence would have increased them. Was not negligent. Nor was he liable for a failure to rent certain premises to other tenants at an advanced price, where he could not do so without purchasing improvements made by the present tenants, when there was no funds of the estate available and the law did not permit him to mortgage; but he was chargeable with a failure to enforce a tenant's covenant to pay taxes. Gomez v. Gomez, 33 App. Div. 379.

Testamentary trustee, who was expressly relieved from liability for loss except through gross negligence, granted an extension of a mortgage without requiring a responsible party to assume the payment of the bonds. He also allowed the party in possession of the mortgaged premises to take the insurance money received, after the premises had been burned, upon the latter's verbal promise to repair. The former was held to be merely an error of judgment, but the latter, gross negligence. Matter of Olmstead, 52 App. Div. 515; s. c. aff'd, 164 N. Y. 571.

Executor continued testator's business by his direction. He was liable individually for his servant's negligence. McCue v. Finck, 20 Misc. 506.

Administrator deposited estate funds in a bank of which he was cashier, knowing of its coming insolvency. Was chargeable with the loss upon its failure. Matter of Scudder, 21 Misc. 179.

Administrators paid estate funds, distributable to next of kin, to the surrogate before judicial settlement of their accounts. There was no warrant or power therefor under the Code of Civil Procedure, section 2537, and the administrators were liable for a loss thereof. Matter of Te Culver, 22 Misc. 217.

Sale of stock was deferred on account of the inability to settle the estate. Administrator was not chargeable with its decrease in value. Matter of Thorp, 31 Misc. 581.

Administrator allowed funds to remain in a bank, of which he was a stockholder, director and the cashier, on two per cent interest for two years instead of distributing them. No objection having been made till final accounting, and no demand for legacies having been made, he was charged only with the interest the funds had actually earned. Matter of Sudds, 32 Misc. 182.

Administratrix was charged with the value and interests of a saloon together with profits, minus the expense of conducting it, where she allowed it to pass under the control of her husband who operated it for her. Matter of Suess, 37 Misc. 459.

Executor is liable when through failure to pay the taxes, real property belonging to the estate is lost. In re Hertemen, 73 Cal. 545.

Trustee mingled trust funds with his own, using them as his own, without investing them for the estate. Was chargeable with compound interest. Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 568.

An administrator was not held liable for the failure of his counsel to take advantage of a technical defect of mortgagee's complaint on foreclosure, nor for paying off a lien on property in the prudent exercise of his duties, though, on a subsequent sale, it brought less than the amount of the lien. Re Armstrong Estate, 125 Cal. 603.

Administrator was charged with interest on an investment directed by the court, in absence of proof that interest could not be collected.

Was charged with interest on a portion thereof retained, in absence of proof that it was for the use of estate. McIntire v. McIntire, 14 App. D. C. 337.

Negligence, by reason of which money of the estate was stolen from the administrator's person. Tarver v. Torrance, 81 Ga. 261.

Administrator who continued decedent's business beyond the time permitted by Ga. Code, sec. 2545, acted at his peril and was chargeable. King v. Johnson, 96 Ga. 497.

Heirs set apart a fund for the payment of an annuity provided for by the will. The trustees were not chargeable with failure to properly invest, where the will did not direct them as trustees to do so. Leslie v. Moser, 163 Ill. 502; rev'g s. c., 62 Ill. App. 555.

An administrator without authority to invest money, but bound to have it ready for payment upon the demand of the one entitled to it, was not chargeable with interest if he had received none. Haines v. Hay, 67 Ill. App. 445; s. c., rev'd on other grounds, 169 Ill. 93.

Executors, in charge of funds, held by their testator in trust to be turned over on the perfecting of a title, refused to turn them over on the perfecting of the title by limitation, but insisted on the execution of deeds or the institution of proceedings to complete the title. They were chargeable with simple but not compound interest. Mathewson v. Davis, 191 Ill. 391; rev'g s. c., 91 Ill. App. 153.

An executor de son tort is chargeable with the diligence of an ordinarily prudent man. Rohn v. Rohn, 98 Ill. App. 509.

Administrator may deposit funds in a bank for a reasonable time while awaiting order of distribution. But, where he receives from the bank a certificate of deposit, payable at a specified time after date with interest, it is a loan and he is liable for a devastavit. Caruthers v. Caruthers, 99 Ill. App. 402.

Executor failed to withdraw his entire deposit from his bank based on the apparently well founded assumption that such action would precipitate an immediate suspension. Was exonerated from liability. Cook v. Barnes, (Ky.) 43 S. W. Rep. 682.

Insurance company gave "a vacancy permit" for 30 days agreeing to extend it for another 30 days upon application. Executor was negligent in not making the application, and liable for the destruction of the property. Henderson Trust Co. v. Stuart, (Ky.) 55 S. W. Rep. 1082.

Trustee is not chargeable with interest where the money was paid out as fast as it was collected. Doom v. Howard, (Ky.) 64 S. W. Rep. 469.

Stocks were properly sold by executors at private sale in small lots, as large sales at public auction would tend to depreciate the market value. Succession of Kaiser, 48 La. Ann. 973.

It was negligence in defendant, as an administrator, to deposit funds of the estate in a bank, which defendant's president knew was insolvent and of whose financial condition its other officers having the matter in charge had enough information to put them upon inquiry. Germania Safety Vault &c. Co. v. Driskell, (Ky.) 66 S. W. Rep. 610.

Administrator was charged with interest at bank rates, where the estate funds were in deposit in his own firm subject to check. In re Brewster's Estate, 113 Mich. 561.

Executor was not liable for selling assets at an unpropitious time to obtain necessary funds, nor for bartering assets in payment of debts, where he had the approval of the court. Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

Trustee held money without using it pending judicial determination of the title to it. Was not chargeable with interest thereon. Also discharged mortgage for less than its face value. Was not liable where he realized the full value of the mortgaged property. Calkins v. Bump, 120 Mich. 335.

In charging an executor of several estates with interest for using estate funds for itself, the amount was arrived at by deducting the proportion of cash on hand belonging to the several estates from the cash balance due them. St. Paul Trust Co. v. Kittson, 62 Minn. 408.

Executor failed to withdraw trust funds from his bank after its resumption of payment, upon the failure of an association in which it was largely interested, but where it was agreed that the bank's creditors should not withdraw. He was not negligent. Harding v. Canfield, 73 Minn. 244.

Administrator was not charged for the difference between par value and market value of bonds where it was not shown that sale was for less than the latter. Ladd v. Stephens, 147 Mo. 319.

Executor deposited estate funds to his own credit, though he appraised the bank of his relationship. Was liable, upon the bank's becoming insolvent. Re Estate of Horner, 66 Mo. App. 531.

Executor failed to keep accounts. On the question of the propriety of a claim, the doubt was resolved against him. Hetfield v. Debaud, 54 N. J. Eq. 371.

An executrix failing to keep account of amount realized from sale of property, was charged with inventoried value. Hunt v. Smith, 58 N. J. Eq. 25.

Due diligence in selection of an attorney was held to excuse an administrator for the attorney's mistakes. Sharpe's Case, 61 N. J. Eq. 601.

Trustees may be sued as individuals for negligence in the management of the estate. O'Malley v. Gerth, (N. J. L.) 52 Atl. Rep. 563.

Administrators were not chargeable with property, which came into their hands, and which was of little or no value, and on which they were unable to realize a profit. Janes v. Brunswick, 8 N. M. 105.

Administrator's failure to plead the statute of limitation was in bad faith. Held, liable, though by statute it was left to his discretion. Person v. Montgomery, 120 N. C. 111.

Trustees, acting within the scope of their authority and exercising such diligence as men of ordinary prudence manifest in like affairs of their own, were not liable for loss of the trust estate. Miller v. Proctor, 20 Oh. St. 442.

Administrator transferred funds from a bank giving interest, to his own, where none was given. Was chargeable with loss of interest. Dick's Estate, 183 Pa. St. 647.

Executor appropriated a lease of liquor saloon, the good will of the business and the right to transfer of the license without attempting to find a purchaser. Was chargeable with amount it was proved they could have been sold for. Buck's Estate, 185 Pa. St. 57.

Executor was not charged with the difference between the inventoried value and the price received on a sale, forced to secure funds. Semple's Estate, 189 Pa. St. 385.

Executrix was chargeable with interest, where she mingled estate funds with her own and had the use thereof. Meyer's Estate, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 476.

Stock being low it seemed the best interest of the estate to hold it for a rise. Administrator not liable though it subsequently became worthless, especially as such action was taken at the request of the beneficiaries. Administrator was not responsible for advice of counsel in regard to defending a suit. Pearson v. Gillenwaters, 99 Tenn. 446; s. c. aff'd, id. 462.

Executor made deposit in a bank, solvent at the time, but which subsequently, without warning, became insolvent. Was not liable. Re Kohler's Estate, 15 Wash. 613.

(f). LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF CO-EXECUTOR.

If one executor allows his co-executor to receive and waste the estate he is liable; but it is not negligence to entrust co-executor with securities to sell on his promise to pay proceeds into general funds. Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 541.

See Sherman v. Page, 85 N. Y. 128; Burt v. Burt, 41 N. Y. 46; Remington v. Walker, 99 N. Y. 626.

Where the assets of an estate had all passed into the possession of one of two executors and trustees, and, upon his death, the surviving executor found that the deceased had mingled the assets with his own, and had partly converted them to his own use and partly lost them by unsafe investments, and, as the best possible arrangement to secure the fund, the survivor took from the estate of the deceased a bond, secured by mortgage on real estate in Ohio, which was guaranteed by the widow, who was sole legatee and at that time solvent, and also took further collaterals for greater safety, the securities being at the time perfectly good, held, that it was the right and duty of the survivor to accept the securities, and that he could not be made personally liable for so doing.

The rule applicable to executors, as such, is that each is liable only for his own acts, and one cannot be made responsible for the negligence or waste of another, unless he in some manner aided or concurred therein. Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 22; Monell v. Monell, 5 id. 283;

Manahan v. Gibbons, 19 Johns. 427. Ormiston v. Olcott, 84 N. Y. 339, rev'g 22 Hun, 270, and aff'g decree of surrogate.

From opinion.—"Nor is the rule more stringent, where executors are also trustees, as claimed in Bates v. Underhill, 3 Redf. 365. The decision in that case is rested wholly on the English rule, which is not so rigorously enforced in this country. Hill on Trustees, 309, note 1; Story's Eq. Jur. § 1280. The authorities in this state do not justify the distinction sought to be made. Banks v. Wilkes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 99; Kip v. Deniston, 4 Johns. 23; Kirby v. Turner, Hopk. Ch. 330; DeForest v. Fulton F. Ins. Co., 1 Hall 130. There would be neither wisdom nor justice in a rule which would practically end in making a trustee a grantor of the diligence and good faith of his associates, and hold him responsible for acts which he did not commit and could not prevent."

Where an executor receives funds of the estate and delivers them to a co-executor, or does any act by which the funds come to the hands of the latter, and but for which he would not have received them, and he diverts or wastes them, said executor is liable for the loss. Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 335; Ames v. Armstrong, 106 Mass. 18; Candler v. Tillett, 22 Beav. 257; Clark v. Clark, 8 Paige, 152; Monell v. Monell, 5 Johns. Ch. 296; Williams on Ex'rs, 1927.

But where an executor is merely passive, not obstructing the collection or receipts of assets by his associate, he is not liable for the latter's waste, unless he assented to it, or having knowledge of a misapplication intended, or in progress, and having the means to prevent it by proper care, neglected to do so. Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 17; Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 566; Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 472.

Where an executor loaned to his co-executor money, taking his individual note therefor, upon the faith of representations of the co-executor, that he desired to use the money to pay debts of the estate, and where it appeared that it was not so used, held, that the money loaned was not a proper charge against the estate.

So also, where an executor received funds of the estate, which he delivered to his co-executor, who misappropriated them, held, that said executor was liable therefor.

Where, however, two executors, under a power of sale in the will, entered into joint contract for a sale of real estate, and the purchaser made a payment in the presence of both, which one of them took without objection from the other, and subsequently misappropriated: held, that in the absence of evidence charging him with negligence, the latter was not liable; that the fact that the co-executor was insolvent was not alone sufficient to so charge him; and that the fact that he joined in the sale did not make him liable. Williams on Ex'rs, 1937, note u; Perry on Trusts, secs. 420, 423. That, at least is the law in this state. Kip v. Deniston, 4 Johns. 25; Monell v. Monell, 5 Johns. Ch. 296.

Also held, that he was not made liable by acts of negligence on his part, which in no way were connected with or contributed to the loss. Croft v. Williams, 88 N. Y. 384, modifying 23 Hun, 102.

Where executors or trustees permit a third party to manage and control the estate, they adopt him as their agent, are responsible for his conduct, and liable for losses occasioned by his improper or negligent management.

It seems, that while an executor or trustee is not liable for acts of a co-executor or co-trustee, which he has not the means of preventing or guarding against, or from which he has no reason to apprehend danger to the estate, he is bound to exercise due caution and vigilance in respect to the approval of, or acquiescence in, the acts of his associate; and if he delivers over to him the whole management of the estate, he is responsible for losses which might have been prevented by reasonable diligence upon his part.

The widow of the testator, who was the co-trustee, and held liable jointly with W., was by the will entitled to the income of one-third of the estate during life. The principal had never been in the hands of W. It was treated, however, as a fund in his hands, and he was directed to pay into the U. S. Trust Co. the portion thereof to which the legatees who recovered were entitled to have paid to them on the death of the widow, the interest meanwhile to be paid to her. Held, error; that, as the fund was lost by negligence with which the widow was equally chargeable, she was not entitled to recover of her co-trustee, but should be compelled to contribute the income toward her proportion of the loss; also, that it would be oppressive to require W. to deposit the principal. Earle v. Earle, 93 N. Y. 104.

As to liability of executor for debt due from himself to the estate, see Baucus v. Stover, 89 N. Y. 11.

The will of W. created among other trusts one for the benefit of the plaintiff, a portion of the fund of which was directed to be separately invested and the income applied to her use during life. The testator was at his death a member of the firm of W. & M. The surviving members of the firm, one of them the defendant G., an executor and trustee under the will, continued the business. G. retained in his possession the books of account, papers, securities, etc., belonging to the estate. Assets realized from the estate were, under the authority of G., paid to the new firm and were, with the knowledge of the defendant, McKesson, a co-executor and trustee, used in its business, the firm paying interest, which was credited in account books of estate to the estate. No portion of the estate was set apart, as the plaintiff's share. The firm failed and the funds of the estate in its hands were lost. McKesson was liable for allowing the funds to accumulate in the hands of the firm without requiring the same to be invested, as directed by the will; also if he had not actual knowledge of the fact, that the firm was using the funds, he could have ascertained that fact by making inquiries, and was negligent in failing to do so. He should at least have sought to have the funds properly invested. G., without the knowledge of McK., hypothecated securities belonging to the estate to secure loans for his own benefit or for that of the firm. Held, that McK. was not liable for the loss; that the failure to make a separation of the securities, as contemplated by the will, did not render him liable, as this did not induce or cause the spoliation, nor would such a separation have prevented it.

McK. was charged with interest on the losses, computed with annual rests. As there was no wrongful intent on his part, this was error; and the simple interest, at five per cent., was a proper charge. Wilmerding v. McKesson, 103 N. Y. 329, aff'g judg't gen. term mod'g and aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

From opinion.—"An executor or trustee is not a guarantor for the safety of the securities which are committed to his charge. * * The general rule * * * is laid down in Williams on Executors, 6 Am. Ed. 1820, as follows: 'A devastavit by one of two executors shall not charge his companion, provided he has not intentionally or otherwise contributed to it, for the testator having misplaced his confidence in one shall not operate to the prejudice of another.' For the devastavit of a co-executor or trustee an executor or trustee is not liable, unless it appears that he had knowledge, or assented to the acts done, or had notice which should excite his suspicion and put him upon inquiry. Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 17; Sherman v. Parish, 53 N. Y. 483; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Peters, 532; McKim v. Aulbach, 130 Mass. 481."

Several persons, including the defendants, were executors of a will; two of them, "C" and "B," took charge and possession of the estate and assumed to administer it, and the defendant had no actual connection with it. "C" and "B" were regarded as prudent, reliable business men, but they misappropriated a portion of the estate and failed. The defendant was not liable.

The mere fact that one of two or more executors is passive, and does not participate in the administration or interfere with the acts of his co-executors in taking possession of the property and collecting moneys of the estate, will not charge him with liability for waste by them; it must appear that he had some reason to apprehend that such might be the consequence of their acts. Cocks v. Hariland, 124 N. Y. 426.

Distinguishing Earle v. Earle, 93 N. Y. 104; Remington v. Walker, 99 id. 626. See, also, Nanz v. Oakley, 120 N. Y. 84.

An executor received funds of the estate and voluntarily delivered them over to his co-executor. He was not allowed to relieve himself of responsibility by showing that they were under the latter's sole control and management. Thompson v. Hicks, 1 App. Div. 275.

One executor had the active management of the estate, but frequently consulted with the other executor in regard thereto; and no action was taken that the latter either did not or could not have known and given advice upon, and which, therefore, had at least her implied consent. She was held equally chargeable with the other's misconduct as to investments. Matter of Peck, 31 App. Div. 407.

It was deemed advisable by all concerned to exclude one of the trustees from the management of the estate except in a few minor ministerial particulars. He was not liable for defaults of his co-trustee where he had no knowledge thereof and the condition of the estate was such as not to excite suspicion. But, where he learned of an act of devastavit by his co-trustee and negligently failed to notify his cestuis que trust he was liable for whatever loss they might have averted by proceedings, had they been notified. Matter of Westerfield, 48 App. Div. 542.

See, also, Matter of Westerfield, 32 App. Div. 324; id., 40 id. 610.

An administratrix had no knowledge of the misapplication of the funds of the estate by her co-administrator, and was guilty of no negligence in not discovering it. She was not liable for the latter's defaults. Matter of Adams, 51 App. Div. 619.

Testamentary trustee was not liable for loss by his co-trustee who was the sole acting trustee and in charge of all the funds. Meldon v. Devlin, 20 Misc. 56.

Negligence of an executor in allowing his co-executors to waste the estate. Clark v. Clark, 8 Paige, 152.

Two executors signed a receipt and the money passed into the possession of one of them. Both were liable for it. Monell v. Monell, 5 Johns. Ch. 283.

Mesick v. Mesick, 7 Barb. 120.

The fact that deceased, while alive, had given to those, who, after his death became his trustees, each different portions of his estate to manage, did not justify them, as trustees, in so dividing the responsibility as to relieve either of the duty of general supervision necessary to the safety of the estate. Birmingham v. Wilcox, 120 Cal. 467.

Trustee moved to another city: whereupon his co-trustee managed the estate himself without the other's assistance. Held, it was not an abandonment of his discretionary power or negligence in the supervision of the trust and he was not liable for his co-trustee's default. Colburn v. Grant, 16 App. D. C. 107; s. c. aff'd, 181 U. S. 601.

Administrator was held liable for his co-administrator's waste, where his negligent conduct enabled the latter to commit it. Whiddon v. Williams, 98 Ga. 310.

An executor, permitting a co-executor to retain funds for private use instead of turning them over to trustee as directed by the will, was held liable for the latter's mismanagement and for payments to one not properly qualified as trustee though cestuis que trust consented. Grundy v. Dyre, (Ky.) 48 S. W. Rep. 155; s. c. aff'd, 49 S. W. Rep. 469.

Trustee to sell property authorized his co-trustee to receive the purchase price and consented to the ratification of the auditor's report of distribution. He was liable for his co-trustee's default. Barroll v. Forman, 88 Md. 188.

Where two executors united in a joint bond, and one of them embezzled part of the funds, each is liable for the other's acts as to property coming into their joint possession. Ames v. Armstrong, 106 Mass. 15.

Brazen v. Clark, 5 Pick. 96.

A trustee joined with his co-trustee in the conveyance of trust property, so as to permit mismanagement by the latter; held that, if it could not be collected from the co-trustee, the other would be liable. Bechtold v. Read, (N. J. Eq.) 32 Atl. Rep. 694; s. c. modified, 54 N. J. Eq. 407.

Joint executors were to each receive one-half of the estate as trustees from themselves as executors. One held a fund, by mistake included in the account of the executors, but never paid into the estate. His co-executor was not liable to latter's cestui que trust for the loss of the fund. Cassel's Estate, 180 Pa. St. 252.

Executrix, who renewed liquor license in her own name and continued the testator's business, was chargeable with the good will of the business. Co-executor was not chargeable, as no part of the estate ever came within his control. Mueller's Estate, 190 Pa. St. 601; aff'g s. c., 8 Pa. Dist. 70.

Testamentary trustee was held for what he received and not for what he jointly receipted for. Birely's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. 395.

Executor's estate was not charged with his co-executor's default, having received no part of the estate. Graham's Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. 479.

Executors, not under bond, are not usually liable for the default of their co-executors. Swift's Estate, 6 Northampton Co. Rep. 105.

Co-executor was not chargeable with funds, which it was not shown, were received or lost by him through his negligence. Ripple's Estate, 9 Kulp, 66.

IV. Trustees, Directors, Financial Agents, Assignees, &amp;c.

Trustees, directors and financial agents are bound to exercise the same degree of care, diligence and capacity, that men of common prudence ordinarily exercise under the same circumstances. Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65; Jones' Appeal, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 143; Waterman v. Alden, 42 Ill. App. 294; Wharton on Negligence, sec. 517.

The diligence is that of a good and conscientious business man, when possessed of the qualifications of the mandatory in question. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 519.

Therefore the mandatory is not required to put forth extraordinary effort, unless that be specially engaged, but should be uniform in the exercise of the requisite care and capacity. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 519.

Such agents are not liable for mistakes of judgment within the scope of their powers. Sperings' Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 11. And when they are invested with the management of funds, according to their judgment and discretion, they are chargeable only for gross negligence and willful mismanagement. Harvard College v. Amery, 9 Pick. 446.

Nor are they liable for the acts of those necessarily, or according to usage, selected to assist in the execution of the business committed to them, provided they use due care in the selection of competent and suitable sub-agents, and in the continued employment of them. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 523.

The trustees of a bank are bound to exercise the same degree of care that men of common prudence ordinarily exercise in their own affairs. Scott v. DePeyster, 1 Edw. Ch. 513, 543; Sperings' Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 11; Hodges v. N. E. S. Co., 1 R. I. 312; S. C. 3 R. I. 9; The Liquidators, etc. v. Douglas, 11 Session Cases (3rd Series), 12 (Scotch); The Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atkyns, 405; Litchfield v. White, 3 Sandf. 545; Story on Bailments, sec. 182.

A savings bank, while insolvent, built a banking building at an improper cost, and thereafter failed. In an action brought by the receiver of the bank against the trustees for damages caused by alleged improper investments of its funds, the trustees were held liable for reckless extravagance. It was not necessary to join all the trustees. Hun v. Carey and others, 82 N. Y. 65, aff'g judgment on cross appeals.

Where the interest, received from the investments of the funds of depositors in a savings bank, exceeded the interest paid, the trustees of the bank were held not to be liable under chapter 371 Laws of 1875, although the expenses of the bank exceeded its earnings and income. In this case no fraud, or other misconduct, or want of ordinary care and skill, was imputed to the trustees. Van Dyck v. McQuade, 86 N. Y. 38.

Distinguishing Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65: Austin v. Daniels, 4 Den. 300; F. Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, 3 Wend. 130; Butts v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 317; Gillet v. Moody,

An assignee for the benefit of creditors is liable for ordinary negligence, or the want of that degree of diligence which persons of ordinary prudence are accustomed to exercise in their own business. He has no right to carry on the business, but must convert the assets. Duffy v. Duncan, 32 Barb. 587. In the matter of accounting of Dean, 86 N. Y. 398.

See Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. 438.

The assignee for the benefit of creditors is bound to use the diligence that a person of ordinary prudence would employ in the collection, recovery and application of assets. Devastavit may be charged from neglect, intentional omission, actual misappropriation and positive fraud. Negligent omission to attack a fraudulent transfer was held to be sufficient to hold the defendant liable. In re Cornell, 110 N. Y. 351.

In re Cohn, 78 N. Y. 248.

If directors, through gross neglect or inattention, suffer corporate funds to be lost or wasted, they are liable therefor. Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 88 N. Y. 52; rev'g 23 Hun, 237, and ordering judgment for plaintiff.

Same case, 99 N. Y. 185; reversing 34 Hun, 352, s. c., 43 Hun, 458; citing Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige, 222; Cumb. Coal Co., v. Hoffman Coal Co., 30 Bard. 159; Cunningham v. Pell, 5 Paige, 607, 613.

An agent loaned principal's money on second mortgages and worthless bonds. The principal, without knowledge of prior liens, received interest; on foreclosure, property sold for less than prior liens. The agent was liable for negligence. Whitney v. Martin, 88 N. Y. 535.

See Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 35; Story on Agency, 183; Story's Eq. Juris., sec. 310.

Although a cashier, by the rules, be required to consult other officers or committees in the matter of discounts, it is not negligence not to do so, if they have no meetings and systematically absent themselves. No bad faith was proved. Second National Bank of Oswego v. Burt, 93 N. Y. 233.

A broker gratuitously loaned money belonging to another, and received as collateral security certain genuine certificates of stock, which had, however, by forgery been raised so as to represent a larger number of shares than they were issued for, and a loss resulted. The broker advertised himself as a dealer in choice stocks and promised his customers careful attention. Upon proof of the delivery of the money to the broker to be loaned, and the failure to return the same on demand, the burden was on the broker of proving that he did his duty without negligence or misconduct. It was a question of fact properly submitted to the jury whether it was negligent to take the certificates without examination, but that it was not necessary to make inquiries or present certificates for verification.

Evidence that the broker had loaned a large amount of his own money on similar certificates, and that such certificates had been bought and sold in the street, was proper. Marvin v. Brooks, 94 N. Y. 75; Onderkirk v. C. N. Bank, 119 id. 267. Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, rev'g 71 Hun, 184, and judgment for plaintiff.

A director of a corporation is the agent or trustee of the stockholders, and as such has duties to discharge of a fiduciary nature towards his principal, and is subject to the obligations and disabilities incidental to that relation. Robinson v. Smith, 3 Paige, 222.

See Scott v. De Peyster, 1 Edw. Ch. 513; Cumberland Coal, &c. Co. v. Sherman, 80 Barb. 553.

Trustee appointed under a trust deed is liable for failure to collect moneys owing to the estate. Meacham v. Starnes, 9 Paige, 398.

Brokers who have peremptory orders to sell under certain conditions, must follow their directions; and are liable for loss incurred for neglect to do so. Hope v. Lawrence, 50 Barb. 258.

See, also, Hanks v. Drake, 49 Barb. 186.

Directors made an unauthorized dividend; but, to remove any doubt as to the bank's solvency, gave their individual notes. These were held to have been properly applied to the damage caused by their improper declaration of the dividend and impairment of capital. Dykman v. Keeney, 10 App. Div. 610; s. c., 16 id. 131; s. c. aff'd, 160 N. Y. 677.

A director, upon personal investigation ascertained that his bank was hopelessly insolvent, but kept it open for deposit, thereby holding it out to the public as solvent. He was held liable to persons who made deposits on the faith of the bank's solvency. Cassidy v. Uhlmann, 27 App. Div. 80; s. c., rev'd for exclusion of relevant testimony, 163 N. Y. 380; s. c., on retrial, 54 App. Div. 205; s. c., aff'd, 170 N. Y. 505, where the relations of stockholders, directors and depositors are fully discussed.

Bank director is not liable for error of judgment, not indicating fraud or lack of knowledge necessary for the position. Godbold v. Branch Bank &c., 11 Ala. 191.

Error by trustee in construing the provisions of a trust deed, whereby he failed to equalize the burden imposed on cestuis que trust, rendered him liable. He was not allowed for claims paid, which were debts of honor but not legal charges. Otherwise as to claims compromised which threatened to impair the fund. Marks v. Semple, 111 Ala. 637.

Corporation executed a note for a loan intended for it. Its president and secretary were, however, officers of another corporation and the money was applied to the payment of stock in the latter. The former company was liable on its note though the latter received the money. Allen v. West Point Min. &c. Co., (Ala.) 31 South Rep. 462.

Knowledge by officers of street railway, that its rights have been encroached upon by a railroad and that the latter has promised to pay damages is imputable to the corporation which is thereby barred of its ejectionment and limited to an action for compensation. Fresno Street R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co., 135 Cal. 202.

Directors were not liable for compensation of receiver where the suit for his appointment was instituted in good faith. Ephraim v. Pacific Bank, (Cal.) 69 Pac. Rep. 436.

Trustee held the proceeds of the sale of goods, which were subject of a suit, to await the order of the court. Though they were mingled with trustee's own funds and used for its own purposes, the trustee always had money on hand to meet the demand for said funds. The trustee was required to account for the profits made in the use of said money. Boston &c. Smelting Co. v. Reed, 23 Colo. 523.

President of a corporation was not permitted to defend an action by its receiver for his negligence in allowing an agent to get behind in his accounts, on the ground that the directors were fully informed of the facts. As fiduciaries, they had no power to ratify such acts. New Haven Trust Co. v. Doherty, 74 Conn. 353.

Directors of bank, in taking notes in payment of stock subscriptions, must at least use ordinary care in ascertaining their value and have reasonable cause for believing them to be worth the amounts for which they were taken. Coddington v. Canady, 157 Ind. 243.

Cashier made investment in notes of residents of good standing of another city. Some inquiries were made, but more thorough inquiry would have disclosed the worthless character of the paper. It was held that the cashier had acted in good faith and with reasonable care. Exchange Bank v. Gardner, 104 Iowa, 176.

A bank indorsed and guaranteed notes of a third person, when the directors knew that the maker of the notes and the bank were both insolvent. It was held, that the directors' contingent liability, the notes not having matured, was not covered by Gen. Stat. 1889 Par. 406, making directors liable upon receiving deposits, or contracting debts when the bank is insolvent. Wichita Nat. Bank v. Weeks, 5 Kan. App. 694.

It is negligence for a trustee having received money, to hand it over without seeing to its due application; to permit co-trustee to deal with it, without inquiry; or, knowing of a breach of trust, to fail to obtain restitution. Darnaby v. Watts, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 457.

A bank president who signed a false publication as to its condition was liable to one to whom he sold shares, who relied thereon. Though her purchasing agent was a director and also signed such statement, he, unlike the president, was not presumed to and, in fact, did not, know of its falsity. Ward v. Trimble, 103 Ky. 153.

See, also, Trimble v. Reid, (Ky.) 41 S. W. Rep. 319.

Directors, acting in good faith, passed cashier's accounts as all right, when, by slight diligence, they might have discovered large overdrafts. It was not such a representation as to his conduct, as to relieve those who subsequently became his sureties from liabilities for cashier's subsequent permission to overdraw. Grant County Deposit Bank v. Littell, (Ky.) 56 S. W. Rep. 669.

Where the president of a corporation received corporate stock in exchange for a stock of goods, his knowledge that he held part of the latter as factor only was not imputable to the corporation. Wyeth v. Renz-Bowles Co., (Ky.) 66 S. W. Rep. 825.

Where property was untenable by reason of lack of repair suffered by trustee while in funds, he was charged with rent. Whittingham v. Schofield, (Ky.) 67 S. W. Rep. 846.

Trustees, invested with management of trust according to their judgment and discretion, are to be chargeable only for gross neglect and willful mismanagement. Harvard College v. Amory, 9 Pick. 446.

Loan by a guardian without security renders him liable. Clark v. Garfield, 8 Allen, 427.

Lovell v. Minot, 20 Pick. 116.

Bank loaned to an irresponsible person on inadequate security through lack of prudent investigation on the part of a director and officer, though he acted in good faith. The director was liable to the bank. Commercial Bank v. Chatfield, 121 Mich. 641.

Directors of a bank, knowing of its insolvency and holding it out as solvent, were held liable to owner of a draft and bill of lading delivered to vendee without payment. Wolfe v. Simmons, 75 Miss. 539.

Plaintiff's brother as her trustee, instead of investing her funds, transferred to her a worthless note for the amount. The transaction was held voidable. Stokes v. Terrell, (Miss.) 23 South. Rep. 371.

Directors left the entire management of the bank to the cashier, who loaned to irresponsible parties in excess of the statutory limit. They were responsible for resulting loss, as the statute imposed the management of the bank's affairs upon the directors. Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo. 380.

Bank directors, who, honestly ignorant of its insolvency, permit a deposit, are not liable under a statute imposing personal liability on directors receiving deposits with knowledge of insolvency. Utley v. Hill, 155 Mo. 232.

If a trustee neglects to deposit funds in a mode indicating his representative character, and the funds are lost, he is liable. Coleman v. Lipscomb, 18 Mo. App. 443.

Where it was the duty of the officers to know the bank's condition they were presumed to know it. Euds v. Orcutt, 79 Mo. App. 511.

Directors of a corporation were held personally liable for the death of one killed by explosion of an unlawful amount of gunpowder stored in the company's warehouse, when, by the exercise of ordinary care, they could have known that the amount was unlawful. Cameron v. Kenyon &c. Co., 22 Mont. 312.

The report of an insolvent bank to the comptroller of the currency represented it to be solvent. Directors who attested it, though done without knowledge of its falsity and without intention to defraud, were liable to one purchasing stock in reliance thereon. Otherwise as to one who did not attest it. Germer v. Mosher, 58 Neb. 135.

Funds being once properly invested, it is not negligence per se for a trustee to permit his co-trustee to assume actual care of them; nor will he become liable until he has some notice of co-trustee's default. Dyer v. Riley, 51 N. J. Eq. 124.

Trustee to deliver bonds in installments upon payment of certain portions of the purchase price was not relieved from liability for delivery without payment by a suggestion from cestui que trust, upon learning of purchaser's inability to pay the portion due, to make the best bargain he could. Danforth v. Moore, 55 N. J. Eq. 127.

Directors of bank could not set up as a defense to an action for loss from their neglect in failing to examine the cashier's accounts, that they were ignorant of a by-law requiring it, or that such by-law had not been customarily observed, or that they relied on the statements of officers and the examinations of the bank examiners; especially where their attention has been called to an objectionable practice. Campbell v. Watson, (N. J. Eq.) 50 Atl. Rep. 120.

Directors of a bank, relying on the honest management of its officers, failed to ascertain its insolvency. Were not liable in equity at suit of depositors, where bank or its assignee failed or refused to sue. Deaderick v. Bank of Commerce, 100 Tenn. 451.

A loan was made of one-third of the bank's capital, but to one who was the chief merchant in the place and in good standing. It was prudent at the time, in view of the surrounding circumstances. The bank's officers and directors were not liable to the stockholders because it happened to turn out disastrously. Wheeler v. Aiken &c. Bank, 75 Fed. Rep. 781.

Directors of a bank failed to discover a default, which examination would have revealed. They failed to examine the books, gave little or no attention to the affairs of the bank and held meetings only at long intervals and then merely to elect officers and declare dividends. They were held liable. Gibbons v. Anderson, 80 Fed. Rep. 345.

V. Public Officers.*

A public officer, not judicial, is bound to exercise only reasonable skill and care in performance of ministerial duties; Olmstead v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 378; Slava v. Jones, 83 Ala. 139; Fairbanks v. Kitteridge, 24 Vt. 12; and also administrative duties. Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 303.

He is liable to one sustaining special damage for the commission of a negligent act, or the negligent omission of a duty, (Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389; Bennett v. Whitney, 94 id. 302; Hover v. Burkhoof, 34 id. 113), or for a failure to perform an absolute duty, in the performance of which an individual has a special interest. Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 548; Bray v. Bardard, 109 N. C. 44.

He is not personally liable for the negligence of a board of public officers, of which he is a member, unless he acts for the board, and is negligent. Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 303.

Nor is he liable for the negligence of servants employed by him. Walsh v. Trustees etc., 96 N. Y. 427. See, 62 id. 160; Almango v. Supervisors, 25 Hun, 551; Cardot v. Barney, 62 N. Y. 81.

As when they are employed by or under him, voluntarily or privately, and paid by or responsible to him. Shepherd v. Lincoln, 17 Wend. 250; Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 311.

But public officers are not liable for non-feasance unless means be at their disposal, enabling them to fulfill the duty imposed upon them, as in the case of highway commissioners and the trustees of an ordinary school district. Bartlett v. Crozier, 17 Johns. 439; Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 310.

The relation between the keeper of the county poorhouse and the superintendent, who employs him, is of a public nature and the former cannot be deemed the agent of the latter, within statute of embezzlement. 2 R. S. 678, section 59. Coats v. The People, 22 N. Y. 245; reversing 4 Park. 662.

A public officer or contractor engaged to perform the duties of a public officer is liable for negligence or malfeasance to any one sustaining special damage in consequence thereof.

In this case a contractor was liable for defective lock gates of which he had notice, and in consequence of which a canal boat was injured.

*NOTE.—As to the liability of a municipality for negligence of its officers, see "Municipality," post.

A failure to keep a public highway in repair by those who have assumed that duty from the state, so that it is unsafe to travel over, is a public nuisance, making the party bound to repair liable to indictment for the nuisance, and to an action at the suit of any one who has sustained special damage. Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 151; Smith v. Wright, 24 Barb. 306; Pierce v. Dart, 7 Cow. 609; Shepard v. Lincoln, 17 Wend. 250; 3 Chit. Cr. Law, 568 (Perk. Ed. of 1841); *Adsit v. The fact that the trustee of a charitable or educational corporation does not appear upon call of case, is not per se negligence so as to charge him personally with costs. Slocum v. Barry, 38 N. Y. 46.

Public officers, not judicial (Mills v. City of Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489), are amenable to one specially injured by their negligence either by acts of omission or commission.

A commissioner of highways with funds in his hands should use reasonable and ordinary diligence to repair a highway of a defect of which he has notice by circumstances or directly. Actual notice is not necessary, where the circumstances are such that ignorance is in itself negligence. Hover v. Burkhoff, 44 N. Y. 113, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

The plaintiff employed the defendant to search for taxes and assessments against land to be purchased. The defendant delivered to the plaintiff a return against taxes, signed by him, and another return against assessments, signed by a third person not employed by the plaintiff, but the defendant took pay for both. The plaintiff afterwards paid assessments not discovered by the search. The defendant was liable. The burden was on the defendant to show that the plaintiff was saved harmless by the warranty against assessments in the deed. Morange v. Mir, 44 N. Y. 315, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

If a person invested with administrative duties of a public nature negligently perform them, he is liable to person injured thereby. McCarthy v. Syracuse, 46 N. Y. 194; Hover v. Burkhoof, 44 id. 113; Mersey Dock Trustees v. Gibbs, 3 Hurl. & Colt. 1043.

Also liable for neglect of those voluntarily or privately acting for him and paid by or responsible to him. Shepherd v. Lincoln, 17 Wend. 250.

A trustee of a Union Free School district is not liable personally for the negligence of the board, but the negligence, if any, is that of the corporation, but when a trustee acts for the board and is negligent, then he is liable.

This action was brought against all the members of such a board jointly as trustees, charging them as public officers, not as individuals, with neglect in not keeping the school house in repair, in consequence whereof the plaintiff was injured. It appeared upon the trial, that the board had an arrangement with "F." one of the defendants, that when any small repairs were needed he was to make them, whether upon order or notice first given, or upon his own motion, did not distinctly appear, and it did not appear that the question of his individual liability, distinct from that of the other defendants, was presented to the trial court. The judgment was against all of the defendants jointly. Held, error; and that it could not be sustained against "F." individually in this action.

Also, held, that the complaint could not be amended by striking out the names of the defendants and inserting that of the corporation, as the corporation had not been brought into court, and the court had no jurisdiction of it, nor could the complaint be amended here by striking out the names of all the defendants save "F." and the designation of him as trustee; as it would be a complete change of the theory of the action.

The break in the floor had been there for three months; and it was inferable that it was due to natural wear and tear; two unsuccessful attempts had been made to repair it. The floor of the room was badly out of repair; this was known to the members of the board, and repairs had been promised by that body. Held, that the evidence authorized a finding that the passage way was negligently out of repair. The action was brought by a school teacher injured by the floor.

Distinction between board of education of Union Free Schools (title 9, chap. 555, L. 1864), and trustees of ordinary school districts pointed out.

In determining the liability of the trustee of an ordinary school district, it must appear that he had command of funds to make repairs. Bartlett v. Crozier, 17 J. R. 439. Bassett v. Fisk, 75 N. Y. 303, rev'g 12 Hun. 209, and judg't for def't.

A public officer, as a drainage commissioner, is liable for lack of reasonable skill and care in the performance of ministerial duty to one specially interested in the discharge of such duty. Adsit v. Brady, 4 Hill, 630; Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528. An officer cannot be compelled to act and will not incur liability by mere omission to do so. Bentley v. Phelps, 27 Barb. 524.

This action was to recover of the defendants, personally, damages, which the plaintiff claimed to have sustained from his misconduct and negligence in not discharging public duties under the drainage act. The defendants, as drainage commissioners, borrowed money, under statute, of plaintiff, and by failure of commissioners to properly pursue the requisite proceedings the plaintiff had been unable to obtain payment. The defendants were not liable, as they were not shown to have omitted any duty. Olmstead v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 378.

One, acting gratuitously as a public officer, is not personally liable for negligence of a person necessarily employed in the execution of an order, properly given by him. The superintendent of school buildings, or ward trustees are not liable for an excavation negligently left open by workmen in the absence of personal negligence or of knowledge that the excavation had been left. Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156; Bailey v. The Mayor, 3 Hill, 538, and cases cited; Story on Agency, sec. 321. Donovan v. McAlpin, 85 N. Y. 185.

While chapter 368, Laws of 1851; chap. 301, Laws 1853; chap. 101, Laws 1854; chap. 574, Laws 1871; chap. 112, Laws 1873, vested the board of education in the city of New York, with the general control and care of the school buildings and property, "for the purposes of public education," it committed the especial care and safe keeping of such buildings in the respective wards to the ward trustees, who are also authorized to make repairs, and are not the agents of the board, but independent public officers, and for their negligence the board is not liable.

The defendant was not liable for injuries sustained by plaintiff in falling into an excavation in the yard of a building occupied as a ward school, the grating to which excavation had been negligently left open, either by the janitor or by masons employed by the ward trustees, in making repairs to the building. Donovan v. Board of Education, 85 N. Y. 117.

A public officer is not responsible in a civil action for a judicial determination, however erroneous, or howsoever malicious the motive which produced it, to persons who have not suffered special damage thereby. East River Gas Light Co. v. Donnelly, 93 N. Y. 557.

See, People ex. rel. Francis v. Common Council &c. 78 N. Y. 33; 34 Am. Rep. 500.

Where an officer has negligently repaired a public street he is liable not for nonfeasance or omission, but for misfeasance (Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389), and it is not necessary to show funds in his hands.

Statute (sec. 6, title 14, chap. 291, Laws 1867), giving action for willful neglect does not take away common law remedy. Addition of official title was descriptio personæ.

One who assumes the duties, and is invested with the powers of a public officer, is liable to an individual who sustains special damage because of a neglect properly to perform these duties.

While the omission of the word "as" is not conclusive, when the body of the complaint plainly discloses an official or representative capacity as the ground of the action, where its scope and averments harmonize with the omission, the action will be considered as against the defendants individually. Bennett v. Whitney, 94 N. Y. 302.

See Slocum v. Barny, 38 N. Y. 46.

Failure on the part of a county treasury to collect a bond and mortgage in his hands; neglect to foreclose same, although interest was, when he came into office, three years in arrears, and delay for sixteen months after is not alone sufficient to create liability against him; facts establishing negligence must be shown, as, that he failed to ascertain insufficiency of property, the insolvency of the mortgagor, etc., and there was no averment that defendant had any knowledge of these conditions. Woolley v. Baldwin, 101 N. Y. 688, sustaining demurrer to complaint.

Trustees of the New York and Brooklyn bridge were liable neither officially nor personally for negligence of laborer on the bridge. They represented and acted as agents of the two cities. Appleton v. Water Commissioners, 2 Hill, 432; Bailey v. Mayor, 3 id. 531; 2 Denio, 433; Barnes v. District of C., 91 U. S. 540; Ehrgott v. Mayor, 96 N. Y. 264; Matter of the Application of the Rochester Water Commissioners, 66 id. 413.

But, under acts chap. 399, L. 1867; chap. 601, L. 1874; chap. 300, L. 1875, the trustees are agents and the employers are servants of the cities of New York and Brooklyn, so as to charge such cities with their negligence. Walsh v. Mayor &c. 107 N. Y. 220; 41 Hun, 299.

Citing People ex rel. Murphy v. Kelly, 76 N. Y. 475, 489.

A sheriff replevied coal on a vessel and, pending justification of securities, put a keeper in charge of the coal, and the vessel sank; held (1) that the sheriff was not an insurer; (2) that the sheriff was bound to use more than ordinary care in protecting property in his possession, which was the subject of litigation. Moore v. Westervelt, 21 N. Y. 103.

The case came again to the Court of Appeals, and it was held, that the sheriff was bound only to take such steps for the preservation of the coal as a careful and prudent man acquainted with the circumstances would take, if the goods were his own. Ordinary diligence alone is usually required, when sheriff is in possession. Verdict for defendant was sustained. Moore v. Westervelt, 27 N. Y. 234; s. c., 1 Bosw. 357; 2 Duer, 59.

Where a sheriff is sued for negligence in allowing the defendant, in his custody under execution, to escape, the judgment on which the prisoner was held is conclusive of the plaintiff's rights. Richtmeyer v. Remsen, 38 N. Y. 206.

Defendant, a supervisor of a town, deposited public money, in his hands, with private bankers who subsequently failed and the money was totally lost. The trial judge found that the defendant acted in good faith and without negligence; but it was held that he was liable for the loss nevertheless; public officers having the custody of public funds being insurers thereof, ex virtute officii. Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135; aff'g, s. c., 77 Hun, 481.

Police officer made an arrest for a felony without warrant and without reasonable cause. The fact that it was subsequently discovered that he had carried concealed weapons and was on this charge convicted and punished did not prevent liability for the false imprisonment on the false charge prior to such conviction. Sneed v. Bonnoil, 166 N. Y. 325; aff'g, s. c., 49 App. Div. 330.

A sheriff who discharged a debtor on an order which failed to state all the jurisdictional facts, was required to show the existence of the omitted facts in order to justify the discharge. Seward v. Wales, 167 N. Y. 538; aff'g, s. c., 40 App. Div. 539.

Sheriff sold goods on execution recovered by defendant, an indemnity bond having been given. Sheriff having been sued for such sale and defeated, sued the bond. Defendant not allowed to allege negligence of sheriff and his attorney in a suit by the owner of the goods, as after notice of such suit to defendant, it was his business to defend it, and the sheriff's defense was gratuitous, and in absence of fraud the defendant was bound by the result of the action. *Howell v. A sheriff received from his judgment creditor, or his attorney, notice of an attachment of real estate in the form required by law, and signed by the sheriff and by such attorneys, together with copies of the affidavit and undertaking on which an order of attachment had been made, and the sheriff undertook to file the notice with the clerk the next morning, but neglected to do so for ten days, which enabled the debtor to convey the real estate before judgment could be recovered against him. It was the duty of the sheriff to file the notice with the clerk, and even otherwise, having undertaken to do so, he was liable for the omission. Lewis v. Douglass, 58 Hun, 587.

County treasurer was held not an insurer of funds, deposited with him, pursuant to statute authorizing such deposit, in trust for heirs of unknown intestate, and, where he used reasonable care in selecting a bank of deposit for such funds, he was not liable because of its unforeseen failure. Gartley v. People, 28 Colo. 227.

City treasurer paid warrants in reliance upon an erroneous denial by a court of a writ of mandamus to compel such payment. It was held no excuse for violating a statute as to the order of payment of warrants. First Nat. Bank v. Arthur, 12 Colo. App. 90.

Public officer liable for negligence of subordinate, if his appointment be private and discretionary with said officer. Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83.

The approving of an appeal bond by a justice of the peace is rather a ministerial than a judicial act, and, if he has acted corruptly or maliciously, an action will lie. Legates v. Lingo, 8 Houst. (Del.) 154.

That township funds were put in a bank considered safe, was held no defense, the township treasurer being an insurer of such funds. Swift v. Trustees of Schools, 189 Ill. 584.

Where an officer replevins, he must ascertain the value of the property; he is liable, if he fails to take a bond in sufficient penalty to protect defendant in case a return is awarded. Mayer v. People, 92 Ill. App. 123; s. c. aff'd, 190 Ill. 109.

Warden of penitentiary and sureties are insurers of public funds coming to his hands. Ramsay v. People, 97 Ill. App. 283.

Board of county commissioners employed contractor, who was negligent in the performance of his work. There was held to be no individual liability on part of the commissioners. Schnurr v. Huntington County, 22 Ind. App. 188.

Sheriff may refuse to levy though tendered indemnification for the consequences, where he shows existence of liens on the property to an amount exceeding its value. Phelps &c. Co. v. Skinner, 63 Kan. 364.

Superintendent of police, through an erroneous but honest misinterpretation of the law, compelled plaintiff to close his saloon. He was acting within the scope of his authority and had not abused his discretion. Lecourt v. Gaster, 50 La. Ann. 521.

Where it is sought to hold a public officer personally liable, plaintiff must show lack of authority. He cannot be so held for acts done under color of official authority. Bright v. Murphy, 105 La. 795.

Officers who honestly seek the enforcement of law and the administration of justice and who are supported by circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the party suspected may be guilty of the offense charged, should not be made unduly apprehensive that they will be held answerable in damages. Lyons v. Carroll, 107 La. 471.

Sheriff is liable where he failed to levy while defendant had property and to make return until after return day. Commonwealth v. Begley, (Ky.) 66 S. W. 754.

Wallace v. City of Menasha, 48 Wis. 79; Uren v. Walsh, 57 id. 98.

VI. Receivers and Assignees.

Property placed in the hands of a receiver as such is protected from an action at law founded on negligence in the management thereof, and the receiver is not liable in such an action. But in the absence of evidence that the receiver, in the management of the property, acted otherwise than as an officer of the court, as if he was or held himself out to be a carrier of passengers in his personal capacity, he would be liable for any injury arising from his negligence or that of his servants. Kane v. Smith, 84 N. Y. 458.

Trustees of a railroad mortgage, given to secure the bonds of the company, who foreclose the mortgage for bondholders, and who, being directed in the decree of foreclosure to bid off the road at a certain sum, if no equal bid is made by others, do accordingly make the bid, receive a deed from the referee, and operate such railroad for the benefit of their cestius que trust, must, as to the public, be regarded as operating the road as owners, and render themselves liable as common carriers of all goods transported over the road under their management.

They are in no sense receivers, or officers of the court, entitled to the immunities from the ordinary liabilities of persons conducting such business, if any, belonging to such officers. Rogers v. Wheeler and others as Trustees, 43 N. Y. 589; affirming 2 Lans. 486.

A special receiver or assignee, in bankruptcy, of property of a railway company is not its agent, nor is it liable for his negligence.

Upon a sale by an assignee in bankruptcy of the tracks, fixtures, rolling stock and franchises of a railroad corporation, the corporation, as a legal entity, does not vest in the purchasers, and they do not become stockholders or corporators therein (following Wellsborough Plank Road v. Griffin, 57 Penn. 417, and distinguishing The Commonwealth v. The C. P. R. Co. 52 Penn. 506, which was decided under a special statute). Nor are the purchasers liable for damages resulting from negligence of those operating the road, intermediate the time of sale and the confirmation thereof by the court. Metz v. B. C. & P. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 61.

See Ahern v. Steele, 115 N. Y. 203, 247; Mayor v. Bailey, 2 Denio, 433.

The assignee in bankruptcy of a railroad, acting merely as an officer of the court, to whom no personal negligence is imputed, is not liable for negligence of a necessary and proper employe. Cardot v. Barney, 63 N. Y. 281, aff'g order granting new trial after verdict for plaintiff.

From decision.—"Public officers performing their duties through the agency and with the assistance of subordinate agents employed by them, whether acting gratuitously or for a compensation, are not answerable for the neglects or wrongful acts of their subordinates. When acting for a compensation, they are regarded as being paid for the services rendered, and not for taking the hazard of the acts of those necessarily employed by them. Lane v. Cotton, 1 Lord Mansf. 646; s. c., 1 Salk. 17; Whitfield v. Lord Ledespencer, Cowp. 754; Hall v. Smith, 2 Bing. 156; Duncan v. Finlater, 6 Cl. and Fin. 894. Sheriffs are an exception to the rule, for the reason that the poundage and other fees to which they are entitled for acts done by their deputies is deemed a just equivalent for their responsibilities. Hall v. Smith, supra.

Best, Ch. J., in Hall v. Smith, supra, says: "The maxim of respondet superior is bottomed on this principle, that he who expects to derive advantage from an act, which is done by another for him, must answer for any injury a third person may sustain from it," thus making the benefit and liability reciprocal. The principle was recognized in Bush v. Steinman (1 B. & P. 404) and the defendant held liable for the reason that the work was carried on for his benefit. Lord Brougham, in Duncan v. Finlater, supra, places the liability upon the ground that what is done by the agent being done for the benefit of the principal, and under his direction, he should be responsible for the consequences of doing it. Scott v. Mayor of Manchester, 2 H. & N. 204, was distinguished from Hall v. Smith by the fact that the corporation derived a profit from the carrying on the works. Rogers v. Wheeler, 43 N. Y. 598; Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vermont, 421; Barter v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9, proceed upon the same ground, that the defendants were the owners of the roads, and were bound personally by their contracts; and that the fact was unimportant that they were trustees and acted in a representative capacity. The actions were upon contracts made by the defendants, and, as in the case of executors and administrators, they were held to answer for them. Ferrin v. Myrick, 41 N. Y. 315. The legal title to the roads was in the defendants, and they operated them as proprietors, and their liability legitimately resulted from their proprietorship, although the title was in trust for others. Judge Peckham said, in Rogers v. Wheeler, supra, they were in no sense receivers or officers of the court. They had assumed to operate the roads, and had made contracts with the public in the course of that business, and there was no principle or policy, that would shield them from liability, if they failed to perform their engagements. Barter v. Wheeler, supra, was decided upon the same views of the position of the defendant. Ballou v. Farnum, 9 Allen, 47, and Lamphear v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 237, were actions against trustees and mortgagees in trust for the bondholders in possession of and operating the roads as such trustees and mortgagees, to recover for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of persons employed by them. The defendants were held liable.

* * * Blumenthall v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402, was an action upon a contract for the carriage of goods, the defendants being receivers of the road by appointment of the Court of Chancery. * * * The court regarded the assumption by the defendants of the extraordinary responsibilities of common carriers as not incompatible with their duties and responsibilities as receivers, and held them to their contracts. * * * Paige v. Smith, 99 Mass. 395, without affirming the soundness of the decision of the case last cited, followed it, in an action against a receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery of the same state, on the ground that it was impossible to accord to the defendants an exemption from the ordinary common-law liabilities of common carriers more extensive than they are allowed in the state in which they were appointed."

Property placed in the hands of a receiver as such, is protected from an action at law, founded on negligence, in the management thereof, and the receiver is not liable in such action.

The officer is individually liable for the management of the property voluntarily assumed by him and over which the court has no control. Kain v. Smith, 80 N. Y. 458; reversing 11 Hun, 552, and judgment of nonsuit.

Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vt. 421; Barter v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9; Blumenthal v. Brainard, 38 Vt. 409; Paige v. Smith, 99 Mass. 395; 20 Ohio St. 137; Ballou v. Farnum, 9 Allen, 47; O. &c. Co. v. Davis, 23 Ind. 553; Newell v. Smith, 49 Vt. 260; Niehols v. Smith, 115 Mass. 332; Lamphear v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 237; Klein v. Jewett, Recr. &c., 26 N. J. Eq. 474.

From opinion.—"Such an officer displaces the directors, and under the direction of the court by which he is appointed, has the sole control of its property and effects, and when authorized so to do, the executive power to use its franchises, (City of Rochester v. Bronson, 41 How. Pr. 78), and is responsible for his conduct in all these things to the court appointing him. In such a case also the remedy for injuries resulting from his negligence, or the negligence of those operating a railroad under him, would be by application to the same tribunal, Noe v. Gibson, 7 Paige, 513; Parker v. Browning, 8 id. 388; Metz v. Buff., Corry and P. R. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 61; Morse v. Brainard &c., 41 Vt. 541; Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474, which might itself dispose of the matter by administering justice between the parties, or allow the party aggrieved to bring his suit at law for the alleged injury. Cases above cited.

But this is so when the person charged is acting under color of its authority merely. * * There must be 'an absence of evidence that the operator assumed to act otherwise than as an assignee, or that he held himself out as a carrier of passengers other than as an officer of the court.' Murphy v. Holbrook et al, Recrs. of the C. P. and L. R. R. Co., 20 Ohio St. 137; Potter, Recr. of the A. and G. W. R. Co. v. Bunnell, id. 150; Henderson v. Walker, Recr., etc., 55 Ga. 481, stand upon the same principle.

So limited, there is no danger that any injury will go without compensation. Damages for injury to the person, whether passenger or employé, for loss of goods in course of transportation, or otherwise, would be chargeable upon, and payable out of the fund in court, the same as other expenses of administration. Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474; Morse v. Brainard &c. 41 Vt. 551; Cowdrey v. G. H. and H. R. R. Co., 3 Otto, 93 U. S. Sup. Ct. 352."

Liability of receiver for negligence; appointed in suit to remove executors; his duty to use active diligence to obtain personal property from executors, etc. Clapp v. Clapp, 49 Hun, 195.

Citing Litchfield v. White, 3 Seld. 438, 443; Matter of Dean, 86 N. Y. 398; Stehman's Appeal, 5 Barr. 413; Pingree v. Comstock, 18 Pick. 46; and distinguishing Lawson v. Copeland, 2 Brown's Ch. C. 156; Schultz v. Pulver, 11 Wend. 362.

An assignee was guilty of such negligence, in failing to collect assets, as would have rendered him liable to removal. But all the assets having been actually collected before an application for such removal was made, nothing remaining to be done but to account, the court ordered that the fund be paid into court for distribution. Tompkins v. Sheehan, 6 App. Div. 76.

Receiver, after being presented with a claim properly stated and a demand of notice of proceedings, made a motion to be allowed to pay a dividend from a fund, without notice, on certain uncontested claims. An order made on such motion was vacated and the receiver required to restore so much of the fund distributed thereunder as would pay such claimant who was entitled to preference. People v. Family Fund Soc., 31 App. Div. 166.

Distinguishing Willis v. Sharp, 124 N. Y. 406; People v. Randall, 73 N. Y. 416; Swart v. Central Trust Co., 27 N. Y. S. R. 113.

Where property was sold below inventory value, the assignee was charged with inventory value, when that was below market value, in the absence of satisfactory explanation. Matter of McFarlane, 65 App. Div. 93; s. c. aff'd, 169 N. Y. 608.

Assignee sold certificates of an insolvent bank, belonging to the estate, to his children at public auction, lending them the purchase money. He was charged with subsequent advance in price of the certificates. Matter of Sheldon, 72 App. Div. 625.

In the absence of authority from the court, a temporary receiver has no power to continue business and bind the estate therein. Appleton v. Welch, 20 Misc. 343.

Negligence of employes, causing fatal injuries, renders trustee of a railroad, for benefit of bondholders, liable. Lamphear v. Buckingham, 33 Conn. 237.

In Illinois, a receiver is liable for injuries caused by the negligence of servants of a preceding receiver. McNulta v. Lockridge, 137 Ill. 270.

A railroad company in the hands of a receiver is not liable for injuries resulting from the operation of the road by him. Ohio &c. R. Co. v. Anderson, 10 Bradw. 313.

Assignee delayed twenty-seven days after assignment before taking possession, the property being in an adjoining state, whereby an attaching creditor gained priority. Delay was unreasonable. Forster v. Second Nat. Bank, 61 Ill. App. 272.

Interest on a fund in the hands of an assignee pending litigation when he was unable to use it was held not chargeable against him. Emig v. Barnes, 77 Ill. App. 616.

Assignee, without waiting for an adjudication as to priority, paid in full claim of assignor's cestui, where identity of trust fund was in question. Was liable to other creditors. Seiter v. Mowc, 81 Ill. App. 346.

Possession of the receiver is not possession of the railroad company; hence, the railroad company is not liable for negligence of receiver's servant. Ohio &c. R. C. v. Davis, 23 Ind. 553.

Assignee was not implicated with his fraudulent assignors, by reason of his failure to investigate their condition, where there were no facts at the time of accepting the trust to arouse his suspicion, or put him upon inquiry. Martin-Brown Co. v. Morris, (Ind. Terr.) 42 S. W. Rep. 423.

Leave to prosecute receiver for negligence of servants not necessary to jurisdiction of a court of law. Allen v. Central R. Co., 42 Iowa, 683.

Kinney v. Croker, 18 Wis. 74. See, however, Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126.

Trustee failed in suit to establish the propriety of an investment, made in violation of statute; application for attorney's fees was denied, he was charged with costs and his commissions were withheld until he made good the loss. Aydelot v. Breeding, (Ky.) 64 S. W. Rep. 916.

Gross negligence and failure to keep accounts, cut down commissions. Ward v. Shire, (Ky.) 65 S. W. Rep. 8.

Receivers of railways may be sued as common carriers; so, where a carload of hay was destroyed by reason of negligence of railroad's employés, the receivers were liable. Paige v. Smith, 99 Mass. 395.

Ballou v. Farnum, 9 Allen, 47; Nichols v. Smith, 115 Mass. 332.

Where the creditors allow the assignee to continue the business in the name and under the direction of the assignee, they cannot receive and use profits in time of success and yet complain of losses in time of depression. Quimby v. Uhl, (Mich.) 89 N. W. Rep. 722.

Assignee, who allowed and paid a claim against the estate to one already indebted to it and in a greater sum, was chargeable for the loss. In re Excelsior Man. Co., 164 Mo. 316.

Admission by receiver that he was operating the railroad at the time of an accident, though another company ran its trains on the same tracks, is binding, in the absence of proof that injury was caused by latter's negligence. Moling v. Barnard, 65 Mo. App. 600.

Property, not included in the trust, a receiver takes at his own risk, though acting under order of court. He is personally liable for such a mistake and may be sued without consent of court. Kirk v. Kane, 87 Mo. App. 274.

Though an excavation has been filled in by the company of which a receiver has been appointed, he is chargeable with notice of a defect occasioned by negligence in doing the work. Robinson v. Mills, 25 Mont. 391.

Liability of receiver for injuries while operating a railroad is tested by the same rules as in case the corporation were defendant. Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474.

Receiver paid a dividend to one not authorized to receive it, when, by due diligence, the mistake could have been prevented. Was chargeable with the loss. Todd v. Meding, 56 N. J. Eq. 83.

Trustees under a railroad mortgage, having foreclosed and purchased the road, which they hold and operate for the bondholders, are liable as common carriers for goods received. Barter v. Wheeler, 49 N. H. 9.

A receiver of an infant's estate will be held accountable, if he makes a loan without taking any security, and loss results therefrom. State, &c. v. Gooch, 97 N. C. 186.

Assignee to settle estate sold notes for less than their value on account of his ignorance as to the debtor's responsibility, where, by exercise of ordinary care, he could have known the facts. Was held liable therefor. Weisel v. Cobb, 118 N. C. 11.

Receiver, operating railroad, is liable for negligence of himself and his agents, where the company would have been. Meara v. Holbrook, 20 Oh. St. 137.

Receiver donated use of opera house for a charitable, benevolent, and social purpose. It was customary so to do to gain the good will of the public, when it could not be otherwise used. Was not chargeable with rent. McKennon v. Pentecost, 8 Okla. 117.

Assignee paid claims to persons not entitled under deed of assignment, without direction or authority of court. He was held thereby to have assumed the burden of showing that the payments were legal. Wright's Estate, 182 Pa. St. 90.

Assignee was not negligent in rejecting as valueless an endowment policy, without convertible value, having only eight years to run and, in the event of death payable to others than creditors. Provident Life &c. Co. v. Fidelity Ins. &c. Co., (Pa.) 52 Atl. Rep. 34.

Assignee delayed sale until season was over, owing to a mistake of judgment. Was not chargeable. Wilson's Assigned Estate, 14 Lane. L. Rev. 370.

Where there is apparently no reason for not declaring a dividend, the assignee is chargeable with interest. Morris v. Ellis, (Tenn.) 62 S. W. Rep. 250.

For negligence, in failing to provide an embankment with sluices sufficient to drain off the water, receivers of a railroad company were liable. Clark v. Dyer, 81 Tex. 339.

In Texas, receiver is not liable in damages for death caused by negligence of company's servants. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Bledsoe, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 88.

Turner v. Cross, (Tex.) 18 S. W. Rep. 578; Yoakum v. Selph, 19 id. 145; Brown v. Warner, 78 Tex. 543; R. Co. v. Geiger, 79 id. 13; Texas &c. R. Co. v. Thedens, (Tex.) 21 S. W. Rep. 132; Campbell v. Davis, 22 id. 244; Texas &c. R. Co. v. Collins, 19 id. 365; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas &c. R. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 167.

Receiver allowed animals to remain on a ranch and failed to insure buildings thereon. Was not chargeable with loss in absence of proof of negligence. Hasum v. Stone &c. Co., 13 Tex. Civ. App. 414.

Receiver not liable for injuries sustained before his appointment. Finance Co. &c. v. Charleston &c. R. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 508.

Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas &c. R. Co., 30 Fed. Rep. 167.

A federal receiver is bound by the laws of the state in which the property is situated, and liable by such laws for negligence of employé having authority over other employés. Peirce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed. Rep. 693.

Assignee failed to make full inventory, but creditors had free access to books and took no objection to a second inventory gotten up at their instance. He failed to bring suit to collect stock subscriptions. The court refused to remove him, as his course was due, not to dishonesty, but to an honest misconception of his duties; especially as the property was not endangered. Putnam v. Timothy Dry Goods &c. Co. 79 Fed. Rep. 454.

Receiver was not allowed counsel fees for services in obtaining his appointment and in sustaining his charges on an accounting. Sowles v. National Union Bank, 82 Fed. Rep. 139.

Receivers were not liable for tort committed by the company before their appointment. Northern P. R. Co. v. Heflin, 83 Fed. Rep. 93.

A fund in the hands of a receiver was not chargeable with interest, on a recovery made necessary by a receiver's bona fide disallowance of the claim. Merchant's Nat. Bank v. School District, 94 Fed. Rep. 705.

Two thousand nine hundred and fifty-two dollars for hotel bills in New York for two years on receivership business, was held an unnecessary outlay and disallowed. Braman v. Farmers' &c. T. Co., 114 Fed. Rep. 18.

Trustees of a railroad for the benefit of bondholders are liable for negligence of employés; but not for negligence of employés of another company, on whose tracks the trains of the first company run. Sprague v. Smith, 29 Vt. 421.

Receivers of railroads, in chancery, sustain the character of common carriers; and, if they expressly contract to deliver goods, are liable for negligence of any connecting road in transporting them. Newell v. Smith, 49 Vt. 255.

Blumenthal v. Brainard, 38 Vt. 402; Morse v. Brainard, 41 id. 550; Cutts v. Brainard, 42 id. 566; Lyman v. Cent. Vermont R. Co. 59 id. 167; Roxbury v. Central &c. R. Co., 60 Vt. 121.

Receiver allowed a claim to become barred by limitation, thinking that the trustee had extended the lien, where by due diligence he could have discovered his mistake. Was held chargeable. Rush v. Steele, 93 Va. 526.

Receiver failed to carry out contract entered into by corporation before his appointment. Was not liable. Casey v. Northern P. R. Co., 15 Wash. 450.

Commissions and counsel fees were denied a receiver, who refused to report, filed an imperfect account when personally cited by the court, used estate funds for his own convenience and employed interested counsel at large salaries in unimportant litigation and the statement of his comparatively simple account. Speiser v. Merchant's Exch. Bank, 110 Wis. 506.

XI. BANKS—SAVINGS.

I. In General.

A bailee should employ the care and skill that an ordinarily good and prudent business man would use under the same circumstances, unless the parties impliedly or expressly contract for a lesser or higher degree of diligence and capacity. This involves all gradations of caution and faculty, from such minor efficiency, as, unobserved, charges the gratuitous bailee for gross negligence, to that highest obligation of prudence imposed upon common carriers of passengers, which, when, not exercised, charges the carrier for slight negligence.* Common carriers of goods, and innkeepers are primarily insurers.

(a). KINDS OF BAILMENTS.

A BAILMENT is a delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust. Story on Bailments, sec. 1. p. 4.

A DEPOSIT is a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor without recompense, and to be returned, when the bailor shall require it, and is entirely for the benefit of the bailor, or a third person.

A MANDATE is a bailment of goods without reward to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them, and is entirely for the benefit of the bailor, or a third person.

†Dr. Wharton states that this term also applies to a bailment, where a compensation is payable according to the value of the service, but not fixed at the time of the bailment. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 484-490; Waterman v. Gibson, 5 La. Ann. 672.

COMMODATUM, a loan for use, is a bailment of goods to be used by the bailee temporarily, or for a certain time without reward, and is entirely for the use of the bailee. It differs from what is termed mutuum in this, that in commodatum the goods are lent to be specifically returned; in mutuum the goods are to be consumed and are to be repaid in property of the same kind.

A PLEDGE, or PAWN, is a bailment of goods to a creditor, as security for some debt or engagement, and is for the benefit of the parties, or both or one of them and third person.

A HIRING, locatio-conductio, is a bailment always for reward or compensation, certain or uncertain, and includes: 1. The hiring of a thing for use (locatio rei.) 2. The hiring of work and labor (locatio operis faciendi). 3. The hiring of care and services to be performed or bestowed on the thing delivered (locatio custodiae). 4. The hiring and carriage of goods from one place to another (locatio operis mercium vehendarum).

*NOTE. However unsatisfactory in principle the terms "gross negligence" or "slight negligence," they probably, from common use, convey the thought of extremes of care.

†NOTE. In case of compensation the bailment would be for mutual benefit, and increased vigilance would be required of the bailee.

Bailments of this kind are for the benefit of the parties, or both or one of them and a third person. Story on Bailments, secs. 4-8, pp. 9, 10.

(b). WHEN BAILMENT EXISTS.

An agreement by producers to deliver goods to a factory, once owned by them, at a certain price and to receive the proportion of the profits, corresponding to the proportion of the goods delivered, was held a bailment and not a sale. Sattler v. Hallock, 160 N. Y. 291; aff'g s. c., 15 App. Div. 500, where the authorities are carefully considered.

Mere fact that property came into a person's possession, without proof of some trust respecting it, does not make him a bailee. Samuels v. McDonald, 3 J. & S. 211.

The overcoat of one attending a theater was taken from a hook in a private box. Proprietor was not liable. Pattison v. Hammerstein, 17 Misc. 375.

See, also, Bird v. Everard, 4 Misc. 104; Schueps v. Sturm, 25 id. 168.

A bailment for no definite period, though for hire, is only a license and is revocable at any time. Gleason v. Morrison, 20 Misc. 4; s. c. aff'd, id. 320.

Restaurant keeper was liable for failing to provide a reasonably safe place for a coat taken by a waiter for safe keeping, as was the custom, in the absence of notice that he would not be responsible therefor. Appleton v. Welch, 20 Misc. 343.

Bailee for indefinite period sold out his own business, notifying bailor to remove the goods or arrange with the purchaser as to them. He was not liable for latter's refusal to deliver to bailor. Emerald &c. Brew. Co. v. Leonard, 22 Misc. 120.

See, also, De Lemos v. Cohen, 28 Misc. 579.

Customer of a tailoring concern left her purse in one room while she was being fitted in another. The concern was held to be bailee of the purse, but the customer was not allowed to recover, on account of her contributory negligence. McAllister v. Simon, 27 Misc. 214.

A customer in a restaurant hung his coat on a hook provided near his table, without directing the care of any of the attendants to it. Neither actual or implied bailment nor negligence in general supervision having been shown, there was no liability. Montgomery v. Ladjing, 30 Misc. Rep. 92.

Where owner of cotton sent it to be ginned, expecting to pay customary storage charges, and it was received to be ginned for hire but nothing was charged for storing and handling, the bailment, as a whole, was one for hire, and the bailee was liable for the lack of ordinary care in not storing it, whereby it was damaged by rain. Union Compress Co. v. Nunnolly, 67 Ark. 284.

Debtor gave a bill of sale of crops to creditor as security, agreeing to protect and prepare them for market. Debtor was bailee of the creditor. Boston v. Rabun, (Ga.) 41 S. E. Rep. 568.

Customer's hat was taken from rack in a barber shop while he was being shaved. Proprietor was liable as a bailee for hire. Dilberto v. Harris, 95 Ga. 571.

Money deposited with a firm and a receipt taken, is a debt and not a bailment, where the intention is that the firm shall deposit it in their bank to their own account, and they are liable when the money is stolen before it is so deposited by them. Geist v. Pollack, 58 Ill. App. 429.

A restaurant keeper was liable for loss of guest's coat, where waiter took it, saying he would take care of it; though there were notices that the proprietor was "not responsible for hats and coats." La Salle Restaurant &c. v. McMasters, 85 Ill. App. 677.

Delivery of cotton to be ginned for a price, is a bailment for hire. Concord Variety Works v. Beckham, 112 Ga. 242.

Deposit of grain with warehouseman to be mingled with other grain, sales being made for the mass, is a bailment and not a sale. Baker v. Born, 17 Ind. App. 422.

Retail dealer requested wholesale dealer to send samples to be examined by a customer with a view to purchasing. The custody of the retailer was in the nature of a bailment, and he is not liable for loss without his negligence. Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

Delivery of grain to elevator company for storage, held a bailment, notwithstanding a custom to treat such transactions as sales, unless the custom was known and contract made in reference to it. Weiland v. Krejnick, 63 Minn. 314.

See, also, Weiland v. Sunwall, 63 Minn. 320.

Transfer of a note for collection only, under circumstance charging transferee with notice of such fact, is a bailment and not a sale of the paper. United States Nat. Bank v. Geer, 55 Neb. 462; rev'g s. c., 53 Neb. 67; s. c., 41 L. R. A. 444.

Upon the deposit of a check, the bank becomes a bailee, unless depositor have the right to immediately check against it or apply it on an indebtedness. Perth Amboy Gas Light Co. v. Middlesex County Bank, 60 N. J. Eq. 84.

Wheat received for storage at the owner's risk was held a bailment and not a sale, where the owner expected to sell to the warehouseman or obtain from him the same quality and quantity of grain on demand on payment of storage charges and return of load checks issued for the original grain. Tobin v. Portland &c. Mills Co., (Or.) 68 Pac. Rep. 743.

An agreement to lease at a given sum with the option to purchase, applying the rental as the purchase price, was held a bailment and not a conditional sale. Cobb v. Deiches, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 252.

Storekeeper was liable for articles which might ordinarily be left by a customer in a dressing booth while trying on other clothes, in absence of a printed disclaimer of liability. But not such articles as a diamond ring. Hunter v. Reed, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 112.

Defendant ordered a scale, agreeing to pay a sum monthly for a certain period, at the end of which he was to return it or purchase it by adding an extra sum. It was held to be a bailment and not a sale. Stimpson Computing Scale Co. v. Schetromf, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 377.

Furniture was left with bailee to be kept by him without charge. He was a gratuitous bailee, and, upon his death, the bailment was terminated, and no trust followed the goods into the hands of his widow. Morris v. Lowe, 97 Tenn. 243.

Proof of lack of due care with proof of possession merely, does not make a prima facie case, the duty of due care must be shown. World's Columbian &c. Co. v. Republic of France, 91 Fed. Rep. 64; rev'g s. c., 83 Fed. Rep. 109.

(c). RULES OF NEGLIGENCE APPLICABLE TO BAILMENTS.*

(1) In the absence of negligence on his part contributing to the result, either at the time it happened or theretofore, a bailee is not responsible for loss resulting from inevitable accident, as by lightning or storms, by the perils of sea, by inundations or earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness, the inroads of a hostile army, or pirates. Story on Bailments, sec. 25.

Nor for robbery by force, either in the highway or from the breaking open of a house, and the assaulting of the inmates thereof (Story, sec. 27), nor for losses by private or secret theft. Story on Bailments, sec. 27. Sturm v. Poker, 150 U. S. 312.

(2) DEPOSITUM.—Where the bailment is entirely for the benefit of the bailor, or of a third person, and is without compensation, the bailee will only be liable for such lack of care, as is termed gross negligence, which Chancellor Kent describes as that want of care, which every man of common sense, under the circumstances, takes of his own affairs.

* NOTE.—These rules are not given as applicable to common carriers or innkeepers; as regards such occupations examine those topics.

Kent's Commentaries, vol. 2, sec. 560; Wharton on Negligence, sec. 476; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Tronstein, 64 Miss. 834.

It is also expressed that the bailee must exercise that ordinary diligence and care which a usually prudent man takes of his own property of a like description. Mark v. Hudson R. Bridge Co., 103 N. Y. 28.

A gratuitous bailee is only responsible for gross negligence. Edson v. Weston, 7 Cow. 278; Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. 25; Spooner v. Mattoon, 40 Vt. 300; Smith v. N. & L. R. Co., 7 Foster (N. H.), 86; Knowles v. R. R. Co., 38 Me. 55; Briggs v. Dearborn, 99 Mass. 50; Sodowsky v. McFarland, 3 Dana, 204; White v. Bank, 4 Brewster (Pa.), 234; Grill v. G. & C. Co., L. R., 1 C. P. 600.

A trunk left in the possession of an employé after employment has ceased, is a "deposit," wherein bailee is liable as for gross negligence. Loss, by reason of employé's failure to tag it before taken away by expressman, did not render employer liable. McKay v. Buffalo Bill's Wild West Co., 17 Misc. 396.

Notes were deposited with a gratuitous bailee to be held until payment of a sum to him, and the surrender of a receipt by him, when they were to be returned to the owner. Bailee was liable for improper surrender to third person, through forgetfulness. Serry v. Knepper, 101 Iowa 372.

Beans were left in storage; but bailee's premises were not a warehouse and he made no charge therefor and did not expect to make any. He was a gratuitous bailee and loss was sufficient to excuse their return unless gross negligence was shown. Dinsmore v. Abbott, 89 Me. 373.

Consignee refused to receive goods. Bailor requested the company to hold them, till further notice. They were destroyed through the explosion of a lamp. It was a gratuitous bailment and bailee not liable without proof of gross negligence. Hapgood Plow Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 61 Mo. App. 372.

Gross negligence of a delivery to one personating depositor was for the jury. Lancaster Bank v. Smith, 62 Pa. St. 47.

Railroad company permitted storage of wool as accommodation in its car. It was not liable in absence of gross negligence. Texas C. R. Co. v. Flanary, (Tex. Civ. App.) 50 S. W. Rep. 726.

Dr. Wharton classifies deposits as follows:

(a) "Those in which deposits are made with persons not in the habit of receiving such deposits," where "the depository is only liable for gross negligence, that is, for the lack of the diligence non specialists show in such matters."

(b) "Where the deposit is made with persons accustomed to receive such deposits in which case the diligence shown must be determined by the usage of good business men of the particular class, in respect to such duties—diligence and care which such men, under such circumstances, are accustomed to exhibit.” Wharton on Negligence, sec. 457, etc.

(3) MANDATUM.—“A mandatary, whether with or without pay, who accepts and undertakes to perform a trust or mandate, must exhibit diligence appropriate to what he undertakes. If he claims to be a business man, experienced in a specialty, he must employ the diligence a good business man in such specialty is accustomed to show. If he disclaims having such special business capacity, he is liable only for the lack of the diligence which a good non-expert in such cases is accustomed to show.” Wharton on Negligence, sec. 510. See, also, secs. 498 and 500.

But this rule is further modified to this extent, that while such bailees are only obliged to exercise the care and skill of good and conscientious business men, when possessed of the qualifications of the mandatary in question (Wharton on Negligence, sec. 518), yet, if the bailee possess certain peculiar aptitudes and capacities, which he offers to another, he must, in the service of the other, diligently employ such faculties. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 517.

Dale v. See, 51 N. J. L. 378; Melbourne v. Louisville &c. R. Co., 88 Ala. 443; Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100; rev'g 71 Hun, 184; Sprangler v. Eicholtz, 25 Ill. 297; Rutgers v. Lucet, 2 Johns. Cas. 92; Saunders v. Hartsook, 85 Ill. App. 55; Maury v. Coyle, 34 Md. 235.

(4) COMMODATUM.—Where the bailment is for the use of and benefit of the bailee, such bailee is bound to bestow “on the thing loaned to him the care which a good business man, versed in the use of such particular thing, would, under the particular circumstances, exhibit, and this would involve special diligence on his part and make him responsible for slight neglect.” Wharton on Negligence, sec. 668. Union Compress Co. v. Nunnally, 67 Ark. 284; Mehle v. Vensel, 39 La. Ann. 680; Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

(5) A PLEDGE OR PAWN.—The bailee must exercise the diligence of a good business man under the same particular circumstances. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 670; Cornell Man. Co. v. Louisville &c. Power Co., (Ky.) 44 S. W. Rep. 637; McMahon v. Philadelphia, (Pa.) 41 W. N. C. 527.

(6) HIRING.—The bailee is liable for the lack of the special skill and diligence, which a person ought to have and exercise, in undertaking to do any work requiring special qualifications. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 713.

This liability may arise not merely in doing the work carelessly, but in entering on the work without due skill; unless his judgment be super-sceded by the judgment or direction of his employer, or unless the employer, at the time of the employment, knew that the bailee did not possess such skill. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 721, 722.

(7) The foregoing rules of liability may be modified by special contract diminishing or enlarging the skill or care, or liability, of the bailee for lack thereof, in all cases where, by the policy of the law, such contract is regarded as binding. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 466, 467; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312; Allen v. Williamsburg Savings Bank, 2 Abb. N. C. 342; Butler v. Greene, 59 Neb. 280; Standard Brewery v. Malting Co., 171 Ill. 602; aff'g s. c., 70 Ill. App. 363; Tindall v. McCarthy, 44 S. C. 487.

(8) It is no defense that a depositary bestowed the same care on the subject of the bailment that he did upon his own property, although evidence thereof is proper on the question of his negligence. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 461, 462; Story on Bailments, secs. 63, etc.

(9) The assent of the bailor to any act or omission or conduct, of the bailee, is binding upon the former. McKay v. Hamblin, 40 Miss. 472.

(10) A bailor cannot recover for injury by third person to property being used within scope of the bailment where the bailee's negligence contributed to the injury. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sims, 77 Miss. 325; s. c., 49 L. R. A. 322.

(11) Where a bailee, under a special or implied contract for a specific use of property, or for the length of time that it should be used or kept, or for any other conduct respecting the same, violates such agreement, or any instructions concerning it, he is liable for any loss which may happen, usually irrespective of his negligence contributing thereto. Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490; McCullough's Lead Co. v. Strong, 3 J. & Sp. 21; Ross v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 41 Fed. R. 152; Keller v. Grath, 45 Mo. App. 332; Fidelity Investment Co. v. Carico, 1 Col. App. 292; Russell v. Roberts, 3 E. D. Smith 318; Anderson v. Foreman, 1 Wright (Ohio) 598; Fareas v. Powell, 86 Ga. 800; Welch v. Mohr, 93 Cal. 371; Murphy v. Kaufman, 20 La. Ann. 559; Wilcox v. Hagan, 5 Ind. 546; Fox v. Pruden, 3 Daly, 187; Lockwood v. Bull, 1 Cowen, 322.

(12) Bailee for hire is liable for the negligence of his servants, or those under his control. Sinclair v. Pearson, 7 N. H. 219. Hall v. Warner, 60 Barb. 98; Smith v. Read, 6 Daly, 33.

As, if a horse be ridden immoderately by a servant, or the servant negligently leaves open the stable door and theft results; or if the bailment be furniture and the same be injured by bailee's servants, children, guests or boarders, or if injury be done to the property by the negligent acts of the sub-agents of the bailee, the latter is liable. (Story on Bailments, 89). Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass. 1. Dansey v. Richardson, 25 Eng. L. & Eq. 90; 3 El. & Bl. 722; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Lord Raymond, 909, 910.

Gratuitous bailee was liable for gross negligence of his servants. Rivara v. Ghio, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 264.

SUMMARY.—It will be seen from the above that the rule is practically uniform, that the bailee must discharge the trust or contract with the prudence and skill which good business men, under the circumstances, exercise; and whatever refinements may be superadded to this, courts and juries will usually hold the bailee to such care. Hence, the question of a bailee's negligence will be measured by his relation to the bailment, the skill or care that he claimed to have, or held himself out as ready to bestow; or that the law required of him as a public agent, the nature and value of the bailment, the benefit given or received, the usages of business, the custom of the bailee to receive such bailment, the particular conduct of the bailee in the care of the property, the peril attending the execution of the trust; and any special agreement increasing or diminishing his liability. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 468, 473, 476, 501.

In Story on Bailments (8th ed.) sec. 62, after stating that reasonable care must be taken of the bailment, it is said that "what is reasonable care must materially depend upon the nature, value, quality of the thing, the circumstances under which it is deposited, and sometimes upon the character and confidence and particular dealings of the parties."

II. Evidence.

(a). IN GENERAL.

It is a general rule that the burden is upon the owner to prove that an injury to the subject of the bailment was caused by the failure of the bailee to exercise due care and diligence. Claflin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260, and the cases there fully considered. Harrington v. Snyder, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 380. Buchanan v. Smith, 10 Hun, 476; Story on Bailments, secs. 397, 399; Wood v. Rennie, 143 Mass. 453.

See, however, Logan v. Matthews, 6 Pa. St. 417; Fox v. Pruden, 3 Daly, 187; Newton v. Pope, 1 Conn. 109.

(b). PRIMA FACIE CASE.

1. BY PROOF OF DEMAND AND REFUSAL TO DELIVER.

Proof of failure to deliver on demand makes a prima facie case of negligence against bailee. Fairfax v. New York &c. R. Co., 67 N. Y. 11; Onderkirk v. Central &c. Bank, 119 N. Y. 263.

A demand is not necessary, unless it be to put the burden of explanation on the bailee. Clafin v. Myers, 15 N. Y. 260, 262; rev'g s. c., 11 J. & S. 1.

Proof of deposit for hire with a warehouse company and failure to return, makes out a prima facie case against the bailee. Lockwood v. Manhattan Storage &c. Co., 28 App. Div. 68.

Proof of demand and refusal before action brought is necessary in case of naked bailee. Brown v. Cook, 9 Johns. 361; Phelps v. Bostwick, 22 Barb. 314.

Formal demand of baggage of innkeeper is not necessary. Cheeseborough v. Taylor, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 227.

Proof that a guest delivered a baggage check to a hotel porter, but could get neither the baggage or the check on demand from the hotel proprietor, makes out a prima facie case. Carhart v. Wainman, 114 Ga. 632.

Proof of failure to deliver upon rightful demand, constitutes prima facie evidence of negligence. Clark v. Shrimski, 77 Mo. App. 166.

See, also, Ross v. Clark, 27 Mo. 549; Donlan v. Clark, 23 Nev. 203.

2 BY PROOF OF RETURN IN DAMAGED CONDITION.

Bailee for hire of a wagon, horse and harness returned them in a damaged condition. Plaintiff, having proved the fact, a presumption of negligence arose, which the burden was upon the defendant to rebut. Rutherford v. Krause, 55 App. Div. 210.

See, also, Lyons v. Thomas, 34 Misc. 175.

In action for conversion for misuse of bailment, the bailor was held not to have made out a prima facie case by proof of delivery in good condition and return damaged. In such cases liability for loss is not dependent on want of ordinary care, but is absolute. Cartlidge v. Sloan, 124 Ala. 596.

Burden of proof is on bailee to show absence of negligence, where the property is injured while in exclusive custody of himself or agents. Pusey v. Webb, 2 Pennewill (Del.), 490.

A prima facie case is made by proof of delivery to a warehouseman in good condition and re-delivery damaged, or of the refusal or neglect to re-deliver at all. Parry v. Squair, 79 Ill. App. 324.

See, also, Saunders v. Hartsook, 85 Ill. App. 55; Hindson v. Bradford, 91 id. 218.

A bailor makes a prima facie case by proof of delivery in good condition and a return damaged. Holt Ice &c. Co. v. Arthur Jordan Co., 25 Ind. App. 314.

See, also, Rayl v. Kreilich, 74 Mo. App. 246; Crawford v. Cashman, 82 id. 554.

Proof of return in a damaged condition throws on bailee burden of showing absence of negligence. Logan v. Mathews, 6 Pa. St. 417.

(c). REBUTTAL BY PROOF OF LOSS OR INJURY CONSISTENT WITH DUE CARE.

Warehouseman must show loss of goods, consistent with due care, then plaintiff must show that this happened through want of requisite care. Claffin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260.

(See opinion in this case, Evidence, post, 130.)

Failure to deliver raises a presumption of negligence; but, being prima facie, it is rebutted by proof of loss by that which is apparently an accident, and the burden which continues throughout the trial is on the bailor to show negligence. Building partially destroyed, collapsed while being repaired. It was held error to charge that, on proof of defendant's failure to return the goods, the burden was upon him to show that he acted as a prudent man. Kaiser v. Latimer, 9 App. Div. 36.

On a retrial of this case, however, it was held that, while, when loss is accounted for by proof of accident or crime, it is necessary for the bailor still to prove negligence; that proof may be furnished by the character of the accident itself, and the rule res ipsa loquitur applied in this case. Kaiser v. Latimer, 40 App. Div. 149.

Fire is not such an event as is ordinarily attended with negligence and consequently does not raise a presumption thereof. Liberty Ins. Co. v. Central &c. R. Co., 19 App. Div. 509.

But evidence that a stove was in such a bad condition that live coals had dropped out of it on the floor; that the fire originated about the stove and the freight agent had been notified of such condition, was sufficient proof of negligence to require a submission to the jury. Grieve v. New York &c. R. Co., 25 App. Div. 518.

And evidence that locks of doors of a warehouse were missing or broken, without other proof of robbery or forcible entry, was not proof of a loss under circumstances not ordinarily attended with negligence so as to rebut the usual presumption arising upon proof of failure to deliver. Lichtenstein v. Jarvis, 31 App. Div. 33; s. c. aff'd, 164 N. Y. 601.

See, also, Hoffman v. Coughlin, 26 Misc. 24.

When delivery of goods by express relieves bailee, see Rhind v. Stake, 28 Misc. 177; Stearns v. Farrand, 29 id. 292.

Possession as a depositary for hire creates the obligations for care. Titworth v. Winnegar, 51 Barb. 148.

Loss of cotton in defendant's possession by theft and fire was admitted. No presumption arose that the loss was due to his negligence. The burden was upon the plaintiff to establish negligence. James v. Orrell, 68 Ark. 284.

Grain was delivered to bailee to be threshed. Upon bailor's proof of loss, burden was upon the bailee to show due diligence. Massillon Engine &c. Co. v. Akerman, 110 Ga. 570.

Cotton was sent to be ginned, for hire. It being lost, the burden was on the bailee to show due diligence. Concord Variety Works v. Beckham, 112 Ga. 242.

Proof of loss of bonds deposited for safety without hire, is insufficient. Lery v. Pike, 25 La. Ann. 630.

Fact of loss of bonds deposited with a bank for safe keeping without hire, is insufficient to establish negligence where inference of due care might be drawn. Smith v. First National Bank, 99 Mass. 605.

See, also, Foster v. Bank, 17 Mass. 478.

Samples were sent to bailee for inspection with a view to purchase. No presumption of negligence arose from proof of loss by theft and the burden was upon the bailor to show negligence. Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

On proof of failure or refusal to deliver on demand bailee must show not only loss but such diligence in their keep as the nature of the bailment required. Davis v. Tribune &c. Co., 70 Minn. 95.

Where grain in a warehouse was lost through collapse of the building, due to a "phenomenal" rise in the Mississippi River, the burden of showing negligence was upon the bailor. American Brewing Asso. v. Talbot, 141 Mo. 674.

Bailee of cotton was not prima facie liable for the loss of same by fire. Bryan v. Fowler, 70 N. C. 596; Henderson v. Bessent, 68 id. 223.

Evidence merely of abstraction by an officer of the bank is insufficient. Foster v. Bank, 17 Mass. 478; Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. App. 317; unless bank knew the true character of the employé and neglected to remove him. Scott v. Bank &c., 72 Pa. St. 471.

And so fact that bonds were stolen without bank's fault. DeHoven v. Kensington Bank, 81 Pa. St. 95.

Upon admission of possession by a bailee, the burden is upon him to show a re-delivery and acceptance. Emmerling v. First National Bank, 97 Fed. Rep. 739.

Property in exclusive possession of bailee was returned damaged in such a way as would not ordinarily occur without negligence. Burden was on bailee to show absence of negligence. Hildebrand v. Carroll, 106 Wis. 324.

(d). BURDEN OF PROVING NEGLIGENCE ON PLAINTIFF.

Although a failure to deliver goods on demand to a bailor raises a prima facie case of liability against the bailee, (Fairfax v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 67 N. Y. 11; Wisner v. Chelsey, 53 Mo. 547), yet the latter may rebut the presumption by showing that the loss was occasioned by some accident not within the control of the bailee (Claffin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260; Mills v. Gilbreth, 47 Maine 320; 74 Am. Dec. 487), and then the burden is upon the bailor to prove that this was chargeable to the bailee's negligence. Russell M'fg Co. v. N. H. S. Co., 50 N. Y. 121; Heinemann v. Heard, 62 id. 448; Blunt v. Barrett, 124 id. 117; Stewart v. Stone, 127 id. 500.

See, also, Schwerin v. McKie, 51 N. Y. 180; Burnell v. New York Cent. &c. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 184, 189; Schmidt v. Blood, 9 Wend. 268; Steers v. N. Y. C. &c. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 184; Claffin v. Meyer, 75 id. 262; Arent v. Squire, 1 Daly, 347; Fox v. Pruden, 3 id. 187.

Burden of proof is on owner to show that the negligence of hirer of a horse was the cause of the injury to the same. Harrington v. Snyder, 3 Barb. 380; Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. 109.

Bailor makes a prima facie case by proof of delivery to a warehouseman and injury. Bailee rebuts the presumption of negligence by proof of injury by acts not usually attended with negligence. The burden is then upon the bailor to show negligence notwithstanding. Mautner v. Terminal Warehouse Co., 25 Misc. 729.

See, also, Higman v. Camody, 112 Ala. 267; Pusey v. Webb, 2 Penn. (Del.) 490.

The burden, first is upon bailor to show refusal to deliver upon demand, then the bailee must show excuse therefor, as of a loss, whereupon the bailor must show loss was by lack of due care. Dinsmore v. Abbott, 89 Me. 373.

The burden is on the bailee to show loss by theft to excuse failure to deliver; but on proof thereof, the burden is upon the bailor to show lack of due care. Knights v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9.

III. Hiring.

Any damage befalling a chattel while in the hands of a bailee, without his misconduct, and while the chattel is employed in the use for which it was bailed, must be sustained by the bailor. So, if a horse be hired to go a journey, and, during the due prosecution of the journey, without any ill treatment by the hirer, become lame, the hirer is not answerable for damages. Millon v. Salisbury, 13 Johns. 211.

Not error to charge that the jury are to decide whether defendant, hirer of a horse, had used due care; what is due care is for the court. Rowland v. Jones, 73 N. C. 52.

(For Rule of Negligence, see ante, p.103, Rule 6.)

(a). DUTY AND RISK OF BAILOR.

While the burden of proof rests upon a bailor charging negligence against the bailee where goods in his hands have been injured by accident, proof of the nature of the accident may afford prima facie proof of negligence, so as to require proof from him to counteract its effect.

Where, in an action for services and materials furnished to defendant's yacht, the latter alleged damage to have resulted from plaintiff's negligence in the performance of a contract to take care of the yacht while out of commission, held, that proof of the condition of the yacht when delivered to plaintiff, the nature of injuries, subsequently sustained, and that they were not the result of ordinary wear and tear, made out a prima facie case of negligence against the bailee.

Testimony of an expert as to whether injuries shown to have been sustained by the yacht were the result of ordinary wear and tear was competent evidence. Wintringham v. Hayes, 144 N. Y. 1.

The plaintiff hired a horse of this defendant, and in reply to his inquiry if the animal was all right, was told, that he was "just a little 'skeery.'" After proceeding about one and a-half miles the horse shied, started up, turned around, and ran down a hill, until the plaintiff checked him, thereupon he turned around again and upset the wagon. The defendant admitted that he knew the horse would shy and turn around. He was legally liable for damages to the plaintiff, and for failure to impart his knowledge of the vivacious propensities of the horse. Kissam v. Jones, 56 Hun. 432.

A foundry company was not liable for the destruction of patterns by fire having exercised due care in the absence of a special agreement to insure. Coldwell-Wilcox Co. v. Sullivan, 3 App. Div. 359.

Plaintiff sought to recover of defendant from whom he hired a saddle, for injuries sustained, by reason of the saddle's being improperly adjusted and in dangerous condition to ride. But, it appearing that he had notice of the fact and attempted to readjust it, his proceeding on his ride after failing to remedy the defect was contributory negligence, by reason of which he could not recover. Wilson v. Dickel, 7 App. Div. 175.

One who takes a horse on trial, with a view to its purchase, and returns it in a damaged condition, is liable for the injury, unless he can account for the injury which caused it and show that it was without fault on his part, or that he used such ordinary care that the proper inference would be that the injury was unavoidable.

Defendant, who wanted a horse, took a horse from plaintiff on trial, and returned it with a fractured leg. In an action for his value, defendant testified that the horse was excited and would rear when he met bicycles, that, notwithstanding this, he rode him for about sixteen miles, and jumped him over a fence, that he became lame when near home and that defendant then dismounted and led him; that it was not his way to take a horse off on a side road when he became frightened at bicycles, but he would conquer the horse or be conquered by him, and that he did not recollect of the horse injuring himself. There was also evidence to show that a horse might sustain wounds or fractures in the hands of a careful driver who might not know or perceive it at the time. Whether the defendant used ordinary prudence in riding and managing the horse was for the referee. Nichols v. Balch, 8 Misc. 452. (New York Superior Court.)

Bailor hired a coach to a club when it was in an unsafe condition. Was liable to a guest of one of its members. Glenn v. Winters, 17 Misc. 597.

Lessor of a bicycle in a dangerous condition, was liable for injuries caused thereby within the period of bailment. Moriarty v. Porter, 22 Misc. 536.

An owner of a horse known to be breachy should contract for greater diligence, if he desires to have more than ordinary care bestowed on him. Mansfield v. Cole, 61 Ill. 191.

Owner of horse cannot recover for its death, when hirer overtasked it to accomplish only what owner contracted for it to perform. Ruggles v. Fay, 31 Mich. 141.

(b). DUTY AND RISK OF BAILEE.

A bailee is liable for any neglect of such care as is usual with good and careful hostlers, or owners of horses. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 715, note 3.

It is negligent to use a horse which refuses its food from fatigue. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 715, citing Bray v. Mayne, 1 Cowen, 1; Eastman v. Sanborne, 3 Allen, 595; Edwards v. Carr, 13 Gray, 234.

A hirer of a horse is liable to its owner for damage caused by improper harnessing by a hostler, to whose care hirer committed him. Hall v. Warner, 60 Barb. 198.

A tailor was not allowed to recover for labor performed on defendant's garments, destroyed by fire, while in his possession, after date agreed for delivery, though the fire occurred without his negligence. Cohen v. Moshkowitz, 17 Misc. 389.

See, also, Kafka v. Levensohn, 18 Misc. 202.

An agreement by bailor to send for the goods bailed does not change the bailee's common law duty to return, save to impose the condition of notice. Gleason v. Morrison, 20 Misc. 320; aff'g s. c., 20 Misc. 4.

Request to forward did not relieve bailee from failure to deliver, where it was not properly complied with. Statement by bailor that a certain express company went her way, was no authority to accept its receipt limiting its liability. Rhind v. Stake, 28 Misc. 177.

Forwarding by the only express available, was a compliance with bailor's directions to send the goods by express, and relieved bailee of responsibility. Stearns v. Farrand, 29 Misc. Rep. 292; aff'g s. c., 59 N. Y. Supp. 384.

Delivery of goods bailed for custody to, or suffering a third person to take the same, is a conversion. Lockwood v. Bull, 1 Cowen, 322.

But after tender to owner, gratuitous bailee lawfully removed goods into a public highway. Roulston v. McClelland, 2 E. D. Smith, 60.

Gratuitous bailee cannot sell property without notice to bailor for non-removal of same, but should, within a reasonable time after notice to remove, store it at bailor's risk. Dale v. Bruckerhoff, 7 Daly, 45.

Nor may he charge the bailor an extravagant price for keeping same. Hazeltine v. Weld, 13 N. Y. 156.

Bailee was negligent in using a barge after discovering that it leaked dangerously, without repairing it or notifying the bailor, and was liable to the bailor for the resulting damages. Higman v. Camody, 112 Ala. 267.

Delivery of certificates to a bank to be delivered over upon payment to it of a price, was not a gratuitous bailment but a lucrative one, in which the bailee was liable for the loss of such certificates through the lack of ordinary care. First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ala. 520.

Plaintiff left his horse to be shod. Shoer permitted one employed in an adjoining shop as a wheelwright, but with sufficient experience in shoeing, to do the job. Injury was due to the horse's restlessness, suddenly and without warning jumping while in the act of having her feet trimmed. Defendant was not negligent. It would be otherwise, however, it seems, had the injury been due to the assistant's incompetence. Pusey v. Webb, 2 Pennewill. (Del) 490.

If a hirer of a horse continues to use him after he knows him to be sick, he is liable for injuries sustained. Thompson v. Harlow, 31 Ga. 348.

Bailor directed the delivery of his cattle by the bailee, a stockyard company, to his purchaser; delivery to one recognized by the latter to be such, was not negligence. Union Stockyard &c. Co. v. Mallory Co., 157 Ill. 554; rev'g s. c., 54 Ill. App. 110.

Bailee receiving grain to be malted was not liable for loss by fire, which was not due to any lack of due diligence. Standard Brewery v. Hales &c. Malting Co., 70 Ill. App. 363; s. c. aff'd, 171 Ill. 602.

A bailee for hire must comply with the conditions of the bailment. On failure to comply, a promise to perform puts him in no better position than a refusal to perform. Kansas Elevator Co. v. Harris, 6 Kan. App. 89.

Bailee of horse to train so used it that it died. Was liable for the lack of ordinary care. Kimball v. Dohoney, (Ky.) 38 S. W. Rep. 3.

The hirer of a horse is liable for its full value, if it becomes sick by reason of improper care; and if owner used reasonable care in the selection of a surgeon, he is not defeated in his action because the surgeon was unskillful. Eastman v. Sanborne, 3 Allen, 594; Edwards v. Carr, 13 Gray, 234; Mooers v. Larry, 15 id. 451. See Strong v. Connell, 115 Mass. 575.

Dressmaker made up a dress from a customer's material, wrong side out. Was liable for the negligence though she received no instructions. Lincoln v. Gay, 164 Mass. 537.

A printer to whom plates had been delivered to print left them lying on the window sill in the shop from which they were stolen. Was liable for negligence. Davis v. Tribune &c. Co., 70 Minn. 95.

A person who hires a barge is not liable for its destruction by ice, unless such liability is expressly set forth in contract of hire. McEvers v. Sangamon, 22 Mo. 187.

Hirer of a team failed to use ordinary care in its use. Was liable. Purnell v. Minor, 49 Neb. 555.

A hirer of a horse is not liable to the owner for injuries caused by immoderate driving, where owner sent his own driver. Hayes v. Boyer, 9 Watt (Pa.) 556.

Bailees of goods for storage took out insurance on them and collected it upon their destruction by fire. Was liable to the owner therefor. McDonald v. Palmer, (Tenn.) 48 S. W. Rep. 338.

It is not negligence as matter of law to drive a horse after it has become sick or exhausted. Spencer v. Shelburne, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 521.

Lessee of a soda fountain failed to properly pack and crate it, whereby it was injured in transportation. Was liable. Phillips v. Hughes, (Tex.) Civ. App.) 33 S. W. Rep. 157.

Where goods loaned for exhibition, at which fees for admission were charged, were destroyed by fire while on storage after the exhibition had closed, the bailor did not recover for the loss through the failure to provide a fire extinguishing apparatus, without showing the duty to maintain it. World's Exposition Co. v. Republic of France, 91 Fed. Rep. 64; rev'g s. c., 83 id. 109.

As to the validity of a provision in the exhibition regulations exempting the company from liability for loss of exhibitor's goods, see World's Columbian Exhibition v. Republic of France, 96 Fed. Rep. 687.

(c). DEVIATION FROM CONTRACT BY BAILEE.

Where plaintiffs had hired out their barge to be used only as a receiving barge in the dock, and it was used by the defendants as a transporting barge, and was thereby sunk, held, that the defendants were liable in an action in the nature of trover for the value of the barge, independently of any question of negligence. Beach v. Raritan & Delaware Bay R. Co., 37 N. Y. 457, rev'g judgt for plff.

Bailee for hire used horse contrary to instructions and burden was on him to show that defect arose without negligence on his part. Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 494.

Citing Story on Bailments, secs. 406, 411; McDaniels v. Robertson, 26 Vt. 340; Roberts v. Riley, 15 La. Ann. 103; Kennedy v. Ashwaft, 4 Bush. (Ky.) 530; Howard v. Babcock, 21 Ill. 259; Buchanan v. Smith, 10 Hun. 474.

Lessor of a bicycle in a dangerous condition was liable for injuries caused thereby only within period of bailment. Moriarty v. Porter, 22 Misc. 536.

Where one used oxen, loaned for a specific purpose, for another purpose, he was liable for injury, and the presumption was that the injury arose during the improper use. Buchanan v. Smith, 10 Hun. 474.

Keeping horse loaned beyond contract time and after demand, makes bailee liable for conversion. Fox v. Pruden, 3 Daly. 187.

As to value of use when article is by oversight not returned. See Russell v. Roberts, 3 E. D. Smith. 318.

Where bailee hired horse to go eight miles and went further, and horse died returning, he was liable in trover. Disbrow v. Tenbroeck, 4 E. Smith, (N. Y.) 397.

Bailee borrowed a mare for light work and used her for heavy work. It was not a hazardous task and was done in a careful manner. He was not liable for negligence notwithstanding the deviation; but he was liable for a conversion, though there was no negligence. Cartlidge v. Sloan, 124 Ala. 596.

A bailee of a mare to drive three miles, drove instead twelve or fourteen miles, and the mare died the next morning. He was liable, unless he could show that the death was due to other causes than his improper use. Kennedy v. Ashwaft, 4 Bush. (Ky.) 530; Howard v. Babcock, 21 Ill. 259.

Where defendant received a mare under implied promise to use her and return within a reasonable time, and failed to comply, he should be sued for breach of contract, not in tort. Wilcox v. Hagan, 5 Ind. 546.

See, also, Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490; McCullough's Lead Co. v. Strong, 3 J. & Sp. 21; Ross v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 152; Keller v. Grath, 45 Mo. App. 332; Fidelity Investment Co. v. Carico, 1 Col. App. 292; Bradley v. Cunningham, 61 Conn. 485; Fareas v. Powell, 86 Ga. 800; Welch v. Mohr, 93 Cal. 311; Murphy v. Kaufman, 20 La. Ann. 559.

If a hirer of horses violates the contract of hire, he will be liable for their loss; so where horses hired to go to "A" were driven beyond "A." to "B." and lost, hirer was liable. Murphy v. Kaufman, 20 La. Ann. 559.

Bailee of a horse for light work only was liable for lack of care in letting it to another who killed it by over driving. Pelton v. Nichols, 180 Mass. 245.

Where bailee, to carry bank notes for another, used the same, substituting other money therefor which was stolen, he was liable. Anderson v. Foreman, 1 Wright, (Ohio) 598.

Bailee was liable for the death of a horse driven beyond the distance for which she was hired, though he had used due diligence. Everton v. Frier, (Tex. Civ. App.) 45 S. W. Rep. 201.

Bailee was liable for the death of a horse kept beyond the time for which he was hired; though otherwise he was guilty of no negligence. Cochran v. Walker, (Tex. Civ. App.) 49 S. W. Rep. 403.

IV. Agistor, and Stable Keeper.

Agistor, not knowing that the pasture, previously occupied by Texan cattle, would infect native cattle pastured there, is not liable for negligence in receiving such cattle for pasture. Gibbs v. Coykendall, 39 Hun, 140; s. c. aff'd, 116 N. Y. 666.

An agreement by the plaintiff to pasture the defendant's cattle is no defense to an action for trespasses committed by the cattle in the plaintiff's garden and oatfield, unless the agreement is shown to be one to pasture them in the garden and oatfield, or unless it is shown that the cattle strayed to those places through some fault of the plaintiff. Myers v. Parker, 74 Hun, 129.

A mare, left with the owner of a stallion for the purpose of breeding and incidentally for pasturage, was injured by a barbed wire fence. The question of whether ordinary care had been used was left to the jury. Saunders v. Hartsook, 85 Ill. App. 55.

An agistor of cattle received them in good condition, but returned them damaged. Negligence was presumed and the burden was upon him to show due diligence. Hudson v. Bradford, 91 Ill. App. 218.

The burden of proof is upon the owner of cattle to show that death or injury to same arose from the negligence of the bailee. Wood v. Remick, 143 Mass. 453.

An agistor is liable for only ordinary care in preventing the escape of cattle. Rayl v. Kreilich, 74 Mo. App. 246.

During the removal with due care of cattle from one pasture to another on account of the failure of water, a steer was struck by lightning. Agistor was not liable as he is not an insurer. Crawford v. Cashman, 82 Mo. App. 554.

A person keeping cattle for another must furnish reasonable and ordinary feed, and use reasonable and ordinary care to protect them. Calland v. Nichols, 30 Neb. 532.

An agistor turned a cow requiring attention into a wood lot, wherein she hid and died from lack of attention. Held negligent. Deyer v. Ackley, 6 N. J. L. J. 283.

Agistor must use ordinary care. Morgan v. Crocker, 3 S. C. 301.

An agistor is bound to maintain a legal fence about a pasture. Lucia v. Meech, 68 Vt. 175.

STABLE-KEEPER.

A stable-keeper should use the care and diligence of an ordinary bailee for hire. See Wharton on Negligence, sec. 693, and cases cited.

Stable-keeper in charge of horses should, when they become sick, give them proper treatment, or at once notify the owner. Hexamer v. Southall, 49 N. J. L. 682.

V. Loans

Evidence as to the dangerous character of a ram and of its owner's knowledge of it was conflicting, but the plaintiff and her son knew that the ram, which had been loaned them and allowed by them to run at large, was usually kept tied. The court erroneously refused to leave the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, in the care of the ram, to the jury in an action for personal injuries. Barlow v. McDonald, 39 Hun. 407.

An association was liable for the loss of an animal loaned to it for exhibition, which escaped through lack of care in caging it. Moeran v. New York Poultry &c. Assn., 28 Misc. 537.

Borrower must exercise care of most prudent persons in the management of their own affairs. Burden of proof is on the borrower to show that a loss resulted notwithstanding such care. Scranton v. Baxter, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 5.

Defendant was gratuitously intrusted with money to be loaned. He failed without excuse to take security or collect it when it became due. Such action was gross negligence for which he was liable. Samonset v. Mesnager, 108 Cal. 354.

The borrower of a horse is bound to greater care than a hirer. Howard v. Babcock, 21 Ill. 259; Bennett v. O'Brien, 37 id. 250.

A bailment for sole benefit of bailee imposes upon him responsibility for slight neglect. Wilcox v. Hogan, 5 Ind. 546.

If article loaned perish, or is lost or is damaged without fault of borrower, owner must bear the loss; as, in case of plaintiff's mare dying while in defendant's charge, question of defendant's negligence is for the jury. Woods v. McClure, 7 Ind. 155.

More than ordinary care is required by law in the case of a loan. Green v. Hollingsworth, 5 Dana (Ky.), 173.

No recovery for conversion of a chattel borrowed, on proof of mere failure to return the article; a demand must be shown. Ross v. Clark, 27 Mo. 549.

The borrower is liable in damages for a chattel stolen from him, nothing being shown to excuse him. Chiles v. Garrison, 32 Mo. 475.

Servant of borrower was injured by a defect in brackets gratuitously loaned, of which the lenders were ignorant. The lenders were not liable. Gagnon v. Dana, 69 N. H. 264.

The owner of an exhibition building failed to provide fire extinguishing apparatus. It was not an insurer; such failure was not lack of due care, and it was not liable to one losing by fire goods loaned for exhibit. World's Col. Exhibition Co. v. The Republic of France, 91 Fed. Rep. 64, rev'g s. c., 83 id. 109.

Pledgee of stock was not negligent in failing to make arrangements with the corporation issuing it whereby the pledgor lost the benefit of the latter's reorganization. Griggs v. Day, 21 App. Div. 442; s. c. rev'd on another point, 158 N. Y. 1.

Pledgee's attorney upon selling the stock pledged, sent the pledgor a newspaper clipping of the auctioneer's advertisement of sale, containing a list of certain securities among which the pledgor's was included without other identification than their designation as "53 shrs. United States Printing Co.," with a mark in ink opposite it. Held, not a compliance by the pledgee with his duty to notify the pledgor before selling the goods pledged. McCutcheon v. Dittman, 23 App. Div. 285; s. c. aff'd, 164 N. Y. 355.

A bank to whom transfers of land certificates had been sent by a pledgee to deliver to another, on collection of debt for which they were collateral, lost them through the lack of ordinary care. Pledgee's failure to have such transfers recorded as required by statute did not prevent his recovery against the bank. First National Bank v. First National Bank, 116 Ala. 520.

By false personation, a party procured goods which he induced defendant to take as security for a loan, under circumstances which put the latter upon notice. Defendant did not make reasonable inquiry and was not a bona fide purchaser. Morning Star v. Sterne, 124 Ala. 512.

Pledgee of a promissory note without authority, compromised with its maker. He was held liable to the pledgor for the true value of the note. Union National Bank v. Post, 64 Ill. App. 404, 407.

Exemptions from liability for loss by fire in pawn ticket must be considered in estimating pawnbroker's liability. Oberman v. Reece, 95 Ill. App. 645.

Pledgee was held liable for interest on neglected security, which, but for his negligence, might have been collected. Mansur-Tebbetts Implement Co. v. Carey, 1 Ind. Terr. 572.

Pledgee was not liable for failure to protect his pledgor's interests by watching debtor to prevent fraud, as the pledgor was not precluded from protecting it. O'Kelly v. Ferguson, 49 La. Ann. 1230.

Makers of a note pledged were insolvent at such time as it should have been collected. Pledgee who had lost the note was not chargeable with failure to collect it. Spencer v. Plano Man. Co., 79 Minn. 35.

Where pledgee sells stock for the best price that can be obtained, which is the full market value thereof, he has discharged his duty. Hewitt v. Steele, 136 Mo. 327.

Pledgee failed to obtain security for notes pledged that could have been obtained. The omission was waived by their acceptance by pledgor without objection. Pledgee was not responsible for delay, as pledgor could have obtained security without their possession. Silvey v. Axley, 118 N. C. 959.

Pledgee was not responsible for lack of due diligence in realizing on securities which were never put in his possession or control. Dean v. Church, 3 Lack. L. News, 224.

Pledgee of notes collectable at a distant point through incidental legal proceedings, was not liable for the negligence of his attorney, where he exercised due diligence in the latter's selection. Plymouth County Bank v. Gilman, 9 S. D. 278.

Pledgee of a note, whose maker had conveyed his property to a bona fide creditor, surrendered it in exchange for one apparently more valuable. There was no negligence making him liable to the pledgor. Hanover Nat. Bank v. Brown, (Tenn.) 53 S. W. Rep. 206.

Owner, failing to reserve title or lien, vendee pledged goods on the representation that they were his, and paid for. Pledgee was not put on inquiry as to pledgor's title by knowledge of the latter's insolvency gained by his willingness to borrow at usurious rate. Fischer v. Lee, 98 Va. 159.

Pledgee must be diligent, in preventing outlaw of the security. But is not bound to foreclose security upon non-payment of one of several notes, where that would curtail his ability to provide for the rest. Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Thompson &c. Man. Co., 71 Fed. Rep. 113.

Pledgee was not liable for selling stock at a price, pledgor, neither knowing the possibility of an enhancement, had previously stated would be satisfactory. Smith v. Lee, 84 Fed. Rep. 557.

A payee of note, by releasing, without the consent of makers, a judgment pledged as collateral, becomes liable for the value thereof as payment upon the note. Brown v. First National Bank, 112 Fed. Rep. 901.

Creditor is liable if loss results from allowing notes given for collateral security to become barred by the statute of limitations. Farm Inv. Co. v. Wyoming &c. School, (Wyo.) 68 Pac. Rep. 561.

VI. Banks—Deposit of Securities with.

(a). GRATUITOUS BAILEE.

If a banking corporation, organized under the "national currency act" of 1864 (13 U. S. Stat. at Large, 99), has authority to assume the duties and obligations of a naked bailee of property, either gratuitously or for hire (as to which, quære), it is outside of its ordinary business, and it is not within the scope of the general powers or apparent authority of its executive and ministerial officers to bind the corporation by a contract for such a bailment.

In the absence, therefore, of proof that special authority has been delegated by its board of directors, or has been exercised with their sanction or knowledge or of evidence that it has been the habit and practice of the corporation to receive property for safe keeping, it is not responsible for property so received by its cashier.

Neither a corporation nor an individual is responsible for neglect in protecting property of which he, or it, has not assumed the custody or any relation of duty or trust in regard thereto.

A circular, issued by such a corporation inviting the correspondence of other banks and offering to buy and sell securities for them, is no evidence of a consent, on its part, to become a general bailee and depository of such securities for its correspondents.

There is no distinction between a deposit for safe keeping of United States bonds and a deposit of other valuable property and the provision of said national currency act (secs. 31, 32), authorizing the associations organized under it to keep one-half of the required "lawful money reserve" in cash deposits in the city of New York, do not authorize the deposit, or the receipt by a national bank in the city of New York, of such bonds as a part of such reserve.

A gratuitous bailee is only liable for gross negligence. He is not bound to resort to any special or extraordinary measures for the security of the property intrusted to him.

In an action for the loss of property intrusted to him, evidence of independent acts of negligence not connected with the loss, is inadmissible.

So, also, evidence is improper tending to show that the property was exposed to loss from some unusual cause, of which he had no knowledge. He is only called upon to protect it against risks known or of which he had notice.

In an action against a national bank, as gratuitous bailee of property which had been stolen by burglars, a witness, who had testified to conversations with defendant's president, in which he notified him of attempts by burglars to enter the bank and of indications of an intended robbery, and urged upon him the necessity of greater care, was permitted to testify, under objection that the president, after the burglary, requested him not to mention such conversations. Held, error; that the evidence was only material as an admission of culpable negligence on the part of the president; and that his acts and declarations after the transaction and when not acting within the limit of his authority, were not binding upon and could not affect the defendant. The First National Bank of Lyons v. The Ocean National Bank, 60 N. Y. 278; distinguishing, Van Leuven v. First National Bank, 54 id. 671.

From opinion.—"Whatever may be the extraordinary or incidental powers of the corporation under its charter, power to bind the corporation can only be presumed to exist in its executive agents and officers within the scope of its ordinary business and their ordinary duties. Life and Fire Ins. Co. v. Mech. Fire Ins. Co., 7 Wend. 31; Minor v. Mech. Bank of Alexander, 1 Pet. 46; Hoyt v. Thompson, 1 Seld. 320; Leggett v. N. Y. Manf. Co., Sandf. Ch. 541.

The powers of the corporation defendant are banking powers only, with such incidental powers as may be necessary to carry on the business of banking, with the privilege of buying and selling exchange, coin and bullion. This does not necessarily include the business of a safe deposit company, or business of receiving for safe-keeping, and storing for hire, or without compensation, jewelry and valuables, or property of any kind. If the power exists in the corporation as a part of its franchise it is only as an incident of its principal business. The duties of the executive officer of a banking corporation who is ordinarily the cashier, are very well understood, and while those of the president are not so well defined, he is but the executive agent of the board of directors, to perform such duties as may be devolved upon him, and is not the corporation, and cannot take the place of the governing board, and make contracts or incur liabilities outside of the ordinary business of the bank without special authority. The corporations formed under the currency act are banks of deposit as well as circulation. They are authorized to issue their own notes for circulation and to receive from others their money and circulate it. Money so received from others is termed a deposit, although it has none of the qualifications of a bailment. There is no trust or promise to redeliver the same money. By the deposit the money becomes the property of the bank, and the relation of debtor and creditor is created between the depositor and the bank. Commercial bank of Albany v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94; Marine Bank v. Fulton Bank, 2 Wallace, 252. This is the character of the deposit which, by the currency act, the defendant was expressly authorized to receive, and in receiving such a deposit the cashier would be acting within the scope of his authority, and the bank, by his act, would become a debtor to the depositor.

The principal attributes of the bank are, the right to issue circulating notes, discount commercial paper, and receive deposits of money. Per Spencer, J., 15 J. R. 390; N. Y. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Fly, 2 Cow. 673, 710. * * *

The deposit of these bonds cannot be distinguished from a deposit of jewelry or plate, or other valuable property, and was a special transaction not within the ordinary course of business of banking, or necessarily incident to it. If authorized, it added greatly to the risk of loss to the shareholders, without adding to their gains. It was a holding out of greater inducements to burglars and robbers from without, and might prove of greater temptation to dishonesty, on the part of the clerks and employes within the bank. As a business, it could not have been undertaken at the risk and responsibility of the corporation by the executive officers, or without the special authority of the board of directors, and a single transaction was without the general scope of the powers and duties of the executive officers of the institution.

Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. Cases, 327, was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Victoria. The defendant represented the Union Bank of Australia, and no question was made as to the authority of the manager of the bank to receive the special deposit; and it is expressly said that the railway debentures, which were stolen by the cashier, were placed in the defendant's care by a customer, in the ordinary course of their business as bankers. The case turned upon the liability of the bailee for a theft by the officers of the bank, and the court following Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, held the defendant not liable. Foster v. Essex Bank was a special deposit of coin, and the bank was held to be the depositary, rather than the cashier or other officers, although not held liable in the action, on the ground of a general recognition and authorization of the practice by the directors, and Parker, C. J., places the responsibility of the defendant solely on that ground; and applying the principles of master and servant, and deducing the relation of bailor and bailee, says: 'Not so, if the servant secretly, and without the knowledge, express or implied, of the master, he not having authorized or submitted to the practice, receives the goods for such purpose, for no man can be made the bailee of another's property, without his consent; and there must be a contract, express or implied, to induce a liability. The knowledge and permission, expressly found or legally to be presumed in this case, establishes a contract between the parties.'

Scott v. National Bank of Chester, 72 Penn. St. 471, followed the case last cited, in principle. A case very analogous to, if not in all respects like this principle, was Lloyd v. West Branch Bank, 15 Penn. St. 172, and it was adjudged that the cashier had no authority to receive, as a special deposit, a sealed package of small notes, issued by a corporation, without authority of law, and that if so received, without the permission of the directors, or their knowledge of any usage or practice to receive such packages on deposit, the law would not imply a contract on the part of the corporation with the depositor for the safe keeping of the package. Coulter, J., says, that, 'It was never designed by the provisions of the statute that the bank should be converted into a kind of pawnbroker shop.' The case turned upon the point as expressed by the court, that there was 'no evidence that the bank made any contract with Oliver (the depositor), express or implied.' The whole tenor of authority is in favor of holding corporations for the acts of their officers, especially executive officers and general agents, within the general scope and apparent sphere of their duties, and not holding them for acts done without special authority in cases without such general scope and sphere of duty. The cases are all reconcilable and sustainable on this principle and no other. Courts and judges have spoken cautiously on the subject, but the language has been uniform, limiting the responsibility of corporations for the acts of their officers and agents, in the absence of an expressed authority to do the particular act, to those performed in the discharge of their ordinary duties in the usual course of business, and within the sphere and scope of such duties. Such are presumed to be by authority of and within the knowledge of the directors; and within the rule are included such acts as are shown to have been performed with the knowledge and implied consent of the directors, although out of the line of ordinary duty and usual course of business. The duties of the cashier are well understood, and as recognized judicially, are restricted to the care and management of the property and fiscal concerns of the bank, and the conduct of its business as a bank, in the usual and ordinary way. Story on Agency, sections 114, 115; Badger v. Bank of Cumberland, 27 Maine 428; Merchants v. State Bank, 10 Wallace 604; Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 3 Ker. 309. The president and cashier of a bank cannot assign the choses in action of the corporation to its creditors as a security for the payment of a precedent debt, without authority from the board of directors. They can do no act outside of their ordinary duties in the conduct and management of the banking business, unless by authority, either express or implied from the fact that they have been permitted to do the like acts without objection. Hoyt v. Thompson, 1 Seld. 320. Judge Wayne, in United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 21 How. U. S. 356, says: 'The court defines the cashier of the bank to be an executive officer by whom its debts are received and paid, and its securities taken and transferred, and that his acts, to be binding upon a bank must be done within the ordinary course of his duties. His ordinary duties are to keep all the funds of the bank, its notes, bills and other choses in action, to be used from time to time for the ordinary and extraordinary exigencies of the bank. He usually receives, directly or through the subordinate officers of the bank, all the money and notes of the bank, delivers up all discounted notes and other securities when they have been paid, draws checks to withdraw the funds of the bank when they have been deposited, and, as the executive officer of the bank, transacts most of the business.' After this summary of the duties and powers of the cashier, the same judge says that he may not make any contract involving the payment of money not loaned in the usual or customary way, or purchase or sell property, or create any agency of any kind for the bank, unless expressly authorized by those to whom has been confided the power to manage the business of the bank, both ordinary and extraordinary. Judge Story limits the authority of bank officers, to bind the corporation, to acts and contracts within the ordinary sphere of their duties, and the scope of the ordinary business. Minor v. Mech. Bank of Alexandria, 1 Peters 46, 70; Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 8 Wheat. 338; see, also, Fulton Bank v. New York and Sharon Canal Co. 4 Paige 127. The doctrine of estoppel may give effect to the acts of the officers of a corporation as against the corporation, as in other cases of principal and agent. Farmers and Mechanics' Bank v. Butchers and Drovers' Bank, 16 N. Y. 125. But there is no question of estoppel in this case.

A class of cases were cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, which do not very directly bear upon the question under consideration. They are those in which a statutory power has been conferred and has been executed, apparently within the terms and in the manner and by the agents prescribed by statute, and a presumption has been allowed in favor of those who have in good faith acted upon the apparent compliance with the statute and the terms of the grant. The cases are circumstantially different, but all may be brought within one general principle, and they do not conflict with the views before advanced. Commissioners of Knox County v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 539; Royal British Bank v. Turquard, 5 E. & B. 248; s. c., 6 id. 327; Commonwealth v. Pittsburgh, 34 Penn. St. 496; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Curtis, 3 Seld. 466, are among the cases cited by counsel, and illustrate the principles governing all. They do not touch the principle upon which this branch of the present appeal rests.

No general principle was decided in Van Leuven v. First National Bank of Kingston, 54 N. Y. 671. By a divided court it was held that the contract in that case, under the peculiar circumstances, was the contract of the corporation, and not the individual contract of the president. The question now under consideration was not considered by the learned commissioner, and does not appear to have been made in the action.

It was earnestly and ably urged upon the court by the counsel for the plaintiff that the corporation was liable as a wrongdoer or tortfeasor within the principle of Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore Railroad Company v. Quigley, 21 How. (U. S.) 202, and other cases which were cited, in which the doctrine was applied under different circumstances. The difficulty with this argument is, that there was no wrong by the corporation, and could be none, if there was no contract. If there was no bailment to the corporation it neglected no duty, and was guilty of no negligence. The whole duty of a bailee rests upon contract, and if there was no contract there was no duty. Neither a corporation or individual can be called upon to pay that which he or it does not owe, and neither is responsible for want of care or for neglect in protecting property of which he or it has not assumed the custody, or any relation of duty or trust in respect to it.

Having arrived at the conclusion that if the power of the corporation to assume the position of bailee, with its responsibilities and obligations, be conceded, there was no evidence of the delegation of the power to the executive and ministerial officers of the bank, and that for that reason the judgment should be reversed and a new trial granted, it is unnecessary to consider the question back of it as to the power of the corporation itself in that direction. It is a question not free from difficulty, but can be more satisfactorily considered when it becomes (if it shall) necessary to a judgment."

The last case came a second time to the court of appeals, and the following is the decision:

Bonds were received by a national bank and placed in a safe, the door of which was sometimes open, and became thereby exposed to persons from the street and was not always kept in view of the bank employés. No account was given of the disappearance of the bonds, but they, together with some belonging to the bank, were stolen. The question of the bank's negligence was for the jury.

National banks have power to receive special deposits gratuitously or otherwise, and when received gratuitously they are liable for their loss by gross negligence. When a national bank has habitually received such deposits this liability attaches to a deposit received in the usual way. The term "special deposits" includes money, securities and other valuables delivered at the bank to be specifically kept and re-delivered, and is not confined to securities held by banks as collaterals to a loan.

The fact that property of the bank was stolen from the same place, at the same time, was not conclusive against the charge of gross negligence. Doorman v. Jenkins, 2 Ad. & Ell. 256; Griffith v. Zipperwick, 28 Ohio St. 388; Tracy v. Wood, 3 Mason 132; Wilson v. McIntosh, 1 Stark (N. P.) 237; Bank v. Gorham, 79 Pa. St. 106.

As to whether, assuming the receipt of special deposits to have been beyond the legal power conferred upon the defendant, yet having in fact received plaintiff's property into its custody, it could set up its own want of corporate power as a defense, quære. Pattison v. The Syracuse National Bank, 80 N. Y. 82, aff'g judg't for pl'ff, distinguishing Lloyd v. W. B. Bank, 15 Penn. St. 172; distinguishing and limiting F. N. Bank v. O. N. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278; and disapproving Wiley v. F. N. Bank, 47 Vt. 546; 50 id. 389.

From opinion.—"In the leading case upon the subject, Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, A. D. 1821, where a special deposit had been made with the defendant, of a cask containing gold coin, it was shown that it had been the practice of the bank to receive special deposits of money and other valuable things, but there was no regulation or by-law or provision of the charter upon the subject. * * *

The court held that the practice of the bank having been to receive such deposits, and its building and vaults having been allowed to be used for that purpose, and its officers employed in receiving into custody the things deposited, the corporation must be deemed the depository, and not the cashier or other officer, through whose particular agency the property had been received into the bank.

The next case on the point is Lloyd v. The West Branch Bank, 15 Penn. St. R. 172, decided in 1850. It was there held that the power to receive deposits, conferred on the bank by the Pennsylvania banking law, referred to deposits of current money received as such, and not to special deposits. But the court, although indulging in some strong expressions, indicative of an opinion that the statute did not intend to confer power, states the question to be, whether there was any such general custom or practice of the cashier of the bank to act as a voluntary bailee without regard, as to make the bank liable for his acts, and the decision rests upon the want of evidence to make any such practice. The court was undoubtedly correct in holding, as it expresses itself, that it was not intended that banks should be turned into pawnbrokers shops, or receive old clothes on deposit. But the case is not an authority for the proposition, that if a bank is in the habit of receiving on deposit coin or other valuables, such as are usually the subject of special deposits in banks, it will not be bound by the act of its officers in receiving them.

But in later cases in the same state, the doctrine of Foster v. Essex Bank is expressly recognized, and applied to national banks. In Lancaster Co. National Bank v. Smith, 62 Penn. St. R. 47, where a special deposit of United States bonds had been made with the bank by delivering them to the teller, and the teller had subsequently delivered them to a third party, supposed to be the depositor, but without ascertaining his identity, the bank was held liable. The case of Lloyd v. West Branch Bank was referred to, but the power of the bank to bind itself by receiving the deposit was not disputed, and it was held that it was a question for the jury whether the bank had been guilty of gross negligence.

In Scott v. National Bank of Chester Valley, 72 Penn. St. R. 471, the facts were almost identical with those in Foster v. The Essex Bank. A special deposit of bonds for safe keeping had been made with the defendant by one of its customers, and the bonds were stolen by the teller of the bank, but no negligence on the part of the bank was established and a verdict for the defendant on that ground was sustained. The receipt of the bonds was not claimed to be ultra vires.

In the First National Bank of Carlisle v. Graham, 79 Penn. St. R. 106, the plaintiff sued for the loss of United States bonds claimed to have been deposited by her with the bank, and relied upon a receipt for the bonds, signed by the cashier of the bank, in which he acknowledged that she had left the bonds in the bank for safe keeping. It was admitted that government bonds were received by the bank for safe keeping, with the knowledge of the president, cashier and teller, and without compensation. A verdict and judgment having been rendered for the plaintiff, it was reversed on exceptions to ruling on questions of evidence, and to some portion of the charge in submitting to the jury the question of negligence, but on the point of liability of the bank, the doctrine of Foster v. Essex Bank was emphatically reiterated, and it is stated that the rule as laid down in that case has been uniformly applied in the supreme court of Pennsylvania in cases involving the rights and duties of national banks.

In Turner v. First National Bank of Keokuk, 26 Iowa 562, the liability of a national bank for a special deposit of bonds was also recognized. Smith v. First National Bank of Westfield, 99 Mass. 605, was also a case of a special deposit of bonds with a national bank, and the bank was held to be bailee of the bond, but liable only for want of ordinary care. To the same effect is Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. (2 P. C.) 317.

In Chattahoochee National Bank v. Schley, 58 Ga. 369, the court after referring to some of the cases, which have been cited, and also to the recent case of First National Bank v. Ocean National Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, and Wiley v. First National Bank of Brattleboro, 47 Vt. 546, summarizes its view of the existing law as follows: 'By habitually receiving through its cashier special deposits to be kept gratuitously for mere accommodation, a national bank will incur liability for gross negligence in respect to any such deposits, received in the usual way.' This I adopt as a concise and accurate statement of the result of the decisions to which I have referred.

The only adjudication to be found in conflict with this doctrine, are the case of Wiley v. First National Bank, 47 Vt. 546, followed by the same court in 50 Vermont 389, where it was held, in direct opposition to all the cases I have cited, that when a special deposit is received by a national bank, even in accordance with usage, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the directors of the bank, the bank is not liable for its loss, even by gross negligence; and this put upon the ground that the bank has no corporate capacity to receive such deposits for safe keeping, and consequently cannot empower any of its officers to incur liability in its behalf by so doing.

There are some cases in which the Vermont cases are referred to with approval, by the judge writing the opinion (Third Nat. B'k of Baltimore v. Boyd, 44 Md. 47, and First Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278), and there is no other adjudication to the same effect. In the case in 60 N. Y. the opinion expressly states that it is unnecessary to consider the question of the power of the bank, that it is a question not free from difficulty, but can be more satisfactorily considered when it becomes necessary to a judgment. The opinion proceeds upon the ground that the receiving of special deposits was not shown to be part of the ordinary business of the bank. That there was an entire lack of evidence that it was the habit or practice of the defendant to receive such deposits. That no authority to the cashier or the assistant cashier to receive special deposits had been shown, and that, whatever might be the incidental powers of the corporation, the power of its officers to bind it can be presumed only to exist within the scope of its ordinary business and their ordinary duties. It is upon this distinction between the facts in the case before the court and those in Foster v. Essex Bank that the opinion proceeds, and not upon a rejection of the doctrine of that case."

A bank, pursuant to directions of a correspondent, to deliver a draft and receive a note together with specified securities of a certain amount, accepted them after glancing at their backs to verify the amount and without inspecting the inside, which would have revealed their spurious character. It had complied with the custom of banks in such transactions and was held not liable. Clinton Nat. Bank v. National Park Bank, 37 App. Div. 601; s. c., aff'd, 165 N. Y. 629.

Plaintiff deposited certificates with a bank to be delivered to a third party upon the payment of a certain sum. Bank was liable where they were lost through the want of ordinary care. First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 116 Ala. 520.

(b). PLEDGE.

Securities deposited with a bank as collateral to a note disappeared. The bank was bound to account for such disappearance and to use ordinary care to prevent it. It was proven, as an item of negligence, that the president was accustomed to use securities for his personal business and that he and the manager conducted the bank with little attention from the trustees. The bank was held liable. Cutting v. Marlor, 78 N. Y. 454, aff'g, 17 Hun, 513, and judg't for def't. Distinguishing, Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479; Jenkins v. Bank of Bowdoinham, 58 Me. 275; Giblin v. McMullen (L. R.) 2 P. C. Appeals 318; Scott v. Bank of Cherry Valley, 12 Penn. 471.

A regular customer of defendant deposited bonds with it as collateral security for discounts. Discounts and renewals upon the security of such bonds were obtained by plaintiff, during a period of four years. When the last note so discounted was paid, defendant's cashier, at his own suggestion, delivered to plaintiff a receipt signed by him as cashier, acknowledging the receipt of the bonds as collateral and stating that, all loans having been paid, the bonds were retained for future like use or safe keeping, subject to the plaintiff's order. Defendant thereafter, as it had done before, paid the coupons falling due on the bonds to plaintiff until October, 1887. In February, 1888, plaintiff demanded a return of the bonds, but was informed, that they could not be found; no information was afforded him, in respect to the circumstances attending their disappearance, or the mode by which they had been removed, if at all, from the possession of the bank. There was evidence tending to show, that it was its custom to return securities, held as collateral, to the owner upon payment of loans; that, while held, they were kept with other valuable securities belonging to defendant in a steel box inclosed in an iron safe; that the safe and box had combination locks, the combination on the box being known to the defendant's president and cashier alone, and the latter alone having the key. It was also proved that the cashier had been in the defendant's employ for many years, and had borne a good reputation until December, 1887, when he was removed for the alleged reason that he was a defaulter. All the defendant's officers, except said cashier, testified that they had no knowledge of its possession of the bonds, or of the place where they were kept after the loans were paid, and that they, respectively, had not abstracted them. Defendant's by-laws provided for the appointment by its president, once at least in every three months, of a committee, consisting of two members of the board, who with the president and cashier, should constitute a committee of examination, and they were required to examine all matters "pertaining to the affairs of the institution" and report the same. Examinations were only made once in six months by three examiners, and were confined to the securities owned by defendant, and those it held as collateral for unpaid loans. The reports showed no account of such collaterals or of special deposits. Defendant was accustomed to receive special deposits from its customers for safe keeping, which were usually kept in the vault, but were not entered upon its books, and no subsequent examination, inspection or report in relation thereto was ever made or provided for. No other evidence was given as to the disappearance of the bonds. Defendant's cashier was not called as a witness. Held, that defendant was not a gratuitous bailee, but the bailment was made one for mutual benefit, and it was liable, at least, for failure to exercise ordinary and reasonable care and diligence in the custody of the bonds; that it was within the authority of the cashier to make the agreement on its part to continue as custodian of the bonds, for the purposes for which they had theretofore been used.

The burden of showing the circumstances of the loss rests upon the bailee, and unless the evidence shows the exercise of due care by him according to the nature of the bailment, he will be held responsible for the breach of his contract to return the property bailed. Caldwell v. Mohawk Bank, 64 Barb. 333; Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490; Cutting v. Marlbor, 78 id. 454; Russell M'fg Co. v. N. H. S. Co., 50 id. 121. Ouderkirk v. C. N. Bank, 119 id. 263; affirming, 52 Hun, 1, and judg't for pl'ff.

The defendant, to secure a debt to the plaintiffs, delivered to them a warehouse receipt for certain wet, salted calf skins. The plaintiffs gave no personal attention to the skins, while in the warehouse, and exercised no supervision over them, but the defendant had free access to them and frequently examined the same. They were injured by the heat of those in the center and this did not appear upon the surface of the pile. The defendant discovered this and advised that they be resalted or tanned, which the plaintiffs declined to do, but, to the proposition of the defendant that they be taken to his warehouse and treated, the plaintiffs did not consent, but suggested that the defendant pay the debt and take the skins.

The legal title to the property was vested in the plaintiffs, and the warehousemen were their bailies, yet the defendant had at least an equal interest in the preservation of the property, and it was not the duty of the plaintiffs to cause the skins to be handled over and inspected, nor to permit the defendant to take them to his own warehouse; and whether any action on their part, for the purpose of preservation, was necessary was a question for the jury. Willets v. Hatch, 132 N. Y. 41, aff'g. judg't for pl'ff.

If the plaintiffs had taken the actual custody of the property, a different question would have arisen. 2 Kent's Com. 587; Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392; G. F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Marr, 46 Penn. St. 504; Hanna v. Holton, 78 id. 334.

VII. Cheese Factories.

The plaintiff and his assignors agreed with the defendant that the latter should manufacture cheese and butter from milk delivered at his factory by the former, and to sell the same and distribute the proceeds. The factory was destroyed by fire and a quantity of the material and product was lost. The defendant was bound to use ordinary care to preserve the property, and the burden was upon the plaintiff to show a breach of this duty, as no presumption of negligence arose from the fact that the loss resulted from fire. Stewart v. Stone, 124 N. Y. 500, aff'g judg't for def't. (Citing, Whitworth v. Erie R. Co., 87 id. 413.)

VIII. Safe Deposit Company.

An officer with a search warrant demanded admission to a box of securities, deposited with the defendant, which having been accorded him, the officer took securities not described in the warrant. The defendant was negligent in permitting removal of property not described in the warrant.

When property, in the custody of a bailee for hire, is demanded by third persons, under color of process, it becomes his duty to ascertain whether the process is such as requires him to surrender it; if it is not, it is his right and duty to refuse to surrender it; also to offer such resistance to the taking and to adopt such measures for reclaiming it, if taken, as a prudent and intelligent man would, if it had been demanded, and taken under a claim of right, without legal process.

While a bailee may excuse himself for permitting the property of the bailor to be taken by a stranger, by showing that he yielded to the power of legal process, a seizure under such a process, after the bailee has negligently allowed the property to pass into the hands of trespassers, is not a protection to him in an action by the owner.

The mere levy, therefore, of an execution or attachment upon property by a creditor of the owner, while in the possession of the tortfeasor, is not available, as a defense or in mitigation, in an action against the bailee.

It seems, if it can be shown that the bailee has had the benefit of the property, by application through regular legal proceedings upon a judgment against him, this will go in mitigation of damages. Roberts v. Stuyvesant Safe Deposit Company, 123 N. Y. 51; reversing 49 Hun. 117.

See, Clegg v. Boston Storage Warehouse Co., 149 Mass. 451; Simmons v. Donfour, 126 Ind. 322; Waller v. Parker, 5 Cald. 476; Edson v. Weston, 7 Cowen 278; Labenstein v. Pritchett, 3 Kan. 213.

Owner of safety deposit vaults is a bailee for hire and is not excused from the exercise of ordinary care by the fact that the depositor has a key. Clerk admitted two strangers without other identification or appearance of authority than the possession of the key and what purported to be a power of attorney without taking the name of the notary thereon. Mayer v. Brensinger, 180 Ill. 110; aff'g s. c., 74 Ill. App. 475.

IX. Warehousemen.*

A bailee for hire, who uses the property contrary to the instructions of the bailor, is liable for a conversion thereof. Where property, in the exclusive possession of such bailee, is injured in a way that ordinarily does not occur, without negligence, the burden of proof is upon the bailee, to show that the injury was not occasioned by his negligence. Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

Plaintiff's goods, while upon defendant's wharf, were destroyed by fire occurring in the nighttime, originating upon the wharf. A large quantity of other freight was upon the wharf and was also destroyed. Evidence was given tending to show that no apparatus or means for extinguishing fires were kept there. A private watchman was left in charge, with some colored men, but neither he nor any of them were produced as witnesses, nor did it appear that he was at his post, or that any person was upon the wharf when the fire broke out. Held, that evidence was such as to require the submission of the question of negligence to the jury, and that a direction of a verdict for defendant was error. J. Russell Manufacturing Co. v. New Haven S. Co., 50 N. Y. 121, distinguishing Lamb v. The Camden and Amboy R. R. Co., 46 id. 271.

Action was for non-delivery of goods; defense was loss of goods by burglary. Held (1) Warehouseman must show to a reasonable certainty that goods were lost by theft, burglary, or fire, as the case may be. (2) The burden is then on the plaintiff to show that this happened through such want of care on the part of the bailee, as a prudent man would take, under similar circumstances, of his own property. Claffin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

From opinion.—"Examining the case under this rule of law we find that there was no proof tending to show when the warehouse was entered, whether in the night or daytime. It was, it seems during a large portion of every twenty-four hours in the custody of the government janitors. It does not appear nor is it found whether access to the warehouse was gained through the scuttle or roof or by the ordinary entrances, whether the thieves got in by stealth and broke out through the roof or broke in through the roof. The evidence was clear that access to the roof was gained from an adjoining tenement-house by means of a burglar's ladder, and a blank brick wall some twenty or twenty-five feet above the roof of the tenement-house was scaled by means of this ladder; that the goods were removed from the third story of the warehouse where they were stored, the packages being carefully replaced so as to delay observation and discovery, and the marks removed from the goods in an upper room of the tenement-house, hired probably by the thieves for the purpose." The evidence was held insufficient.

The plaintiff contracted for the storing of her goods in a partitioned room, in the defendant's warehouse, and each party had one key. Some of the goods were stolen and it was held that the defendant, if liable at all, was liable as a warehouseman and bound to use ordinary care. Jones v. Morgan, 90 N. Y. 4, aff'g, 24 Hun, 372, and judg't for pl'ff.

From opinion.—"It is not absolutely essential to determine whether the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was one of bailment of the goods or of hiring the room in which they were stored, because whichever it was; the defendant was bound to exercise ordinary care and prudence in guarding them. Such a responsibility was imposed upon him by the very nature of the transaction. The plaintiff was seeking a safe place for the storage of her goods. The defendant had a storehouse in which the storage business was carried on, and he assured her that her goods would be safe therein, and that they would be under the guard of a watchman by night and a responsible or reliable man by day. The price for the space in the storehouse allotted to the plaintiff was fixed in reference to these circumstances. The parties could not have understood that the defendant was to take no care of the goods. The very nature of the contract and the relation between the parties imposed upon the defendant the obligation of ordinary care and prudence in keeping the goods. It is like the case of one who hires a box contained in the safe of a safe-deposit company. He may keep the key, but the company, without special contract to that effect, would be held to at least ordinary care in keeping the deposit, and the duty of such care would arise from the nature of the business it was carrying on, and the obligation to discharge it would be implied from the relation between the parties.

But we are of the opinion that the judge was right in holding that the contract was one of bailment. The building in which the goods were stored was a storehouse, and the business therein carried on was the storage business. The business was advertised as such, and the plaintiff went to the storehouse to have her goods stored there. When she paid money on account of the space occupied by her in the building, it was always paid as storage, and receipted to her as such. It matters not that in some of the conversations between the parties the price was called rent. It was generally called the price of storage, and by whatever name it was called it is clear that the parties always understood it to be the price or charge for storage.

It matters not that a space was assigned to the plaintiff for the storage of her goods, and separated from the rest of the room in which it was by board partitions. That was by special arrangement between the parties, and the defendant accepted the goods in that way. They were in bulk in his storehouse under his charge and in his keeping, just as they would have been, if they had been placed in a large box or in locked-up boxes in the same room. It is a species of bailment like that existing in the case of the depositor in a safe-deposit company, who hires a box for his valuables and keeps the key; but as I have before stated, it is unnecessary to define the precise nature of the contract, or to give it a name. The defendant assumed the obligation of ordinary care and prudence in keeping the goods, and that is sufficient to sustain the charge of the judge."

X. Innkeepers.

An innkeeper is bound to receive all travellers and wayfaring persons and entertain them for a reasonable compensation, if they can be accommodated. Mowers v. Fethers, 61 N. Y. 34.

And he is liable for such property of his guest, whether the same be in his general or special keeping. Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172; Smith v. Wilson, 36 Minn. 334; Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. 280; Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. N. Y. 175.

This liability does not arise unless the relation of innkeeper and guest exists. Ingallsbee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577.

But where it does not exist the innkeeper may be liable as an ordinary bailee for property deposited with him.

The relation of innkeeper and guest is not distinguished by the mere fact that there is a special agreement as to time and price. Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 CUSH. 417.

But the circumstances may establish that the alleged guest was but a boarder under a special contract as to time and price. Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush, (Ky.) 41; Pollock v. Landis, 36 Iowa, 651; Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468; Johnson v. Reynolds, 3 Kan. 257.

Or that although provided with food, drink and lodging he did not sustain the relation of guest. Gastenhoper v. Clair, 10 Daly, (N. Y.) 265; Commonwealth v. Moore, 145 Mass. 244; Fitch v. Casler, 17 Hun, 126.

In some states an innkeeper may limit his liability in the same way as common carriers of goods; such limitation is frequently provided by statute. The statute must be strictly observed both by the guest and the innkeeper. Purvis v. Coleman, 21 N. Y. 111; Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539; Bendetson v. French, 46 N. Y. 266; Porter v. Gilky, 57 Mo. 235.

A guest must conform to the reasonable rules and regulations of inns, and his negligence contributing to loss of his property is a matter of defense for the landlord. The innkeeper's liability ends when the guest has had a reasonable opportunity to remove his goods at the expiration of the relation.

(a). *WHO IS ENTITLED TO BE A GUEST.

An innkeeper has the right to eject a person not a guest who enters the house to drum up business for his employers. State v. Steele, 106 N. C. 766.

(b). NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

An innkeeper, is an insurer of property, committed to his custody by a guest, unless the loss be due to the culpable negligence or fraud of the guest, or to the act of God, or the public enemy.

The rule that the landlord shall be held responsible for goods entrusted to him for safe keeping by the traveler, and subject to detention for his charges, is founded in considerations of public policy.

The statute enables him to require the observance of appropriate precautions by the guest: but it does not absolve him from his obligation to respond for losses caused by the negligence of himself or his servants, or by the depredations of knaves or marauders, within or without the curtilage.

Held, accordingly, that the innkeeper is responsible for the loss of the goods of his guest by fire, the cause of the fire being unknown, and the guest being free from negligence. Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571.

From opinion.—"In cases of loss, either the innkeeper or the guest must be the sufferer; and the common law furnishes the solution of the question, on which of them it should properly fall. In the case of Cross v. Andrews, the rule was tersely stated by the court. 'The defendant, if he will keep an inn, ought, at his peril, to keep safely his guests' goods.' Croke's Eliz. 622. He must guard them against the incendiary, the burglar and the thief; and he is equally bound to respond to their loss, whether caused by his own negligence or by the depredations of knaves and marauders, within or without the curtilage.

This doctrine is too well settled in the English courts, to be shaken by the exceptional case on which the appellant relies. Calve's case, 8 Coke, 32; Cross v. Andrews, Croke's Eliz. 622; Richmond v. Smith, 8 Barn. & Cress 803; Cashill v. Wright, 37 Eng. Law & Eq. 175."

enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities and privileges of any hotel, inn, tavern, restaurant, public conveyance on land or water, theatre or other place of public resort or amusement, is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars "

In the courts of this state, it has always been held that the innkeeper, like the carrier, is, by the common law, an insurer. Purvis v. Coleman, 21 N. Y. 111, 112, 117; Wells v. Steam Navigation Co., 2 Comst. 204, 209; Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. 70, 74; Ingallsbee v. Wood, id. 458; Washburn v. Jones, 14 id. 193, 195; McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 id. 564; Taylor v. Monnot, 4 Duer 117; Stanton v. Leland, 4 E. D. Smith, 94; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill 488; Piper v. Many, 21 Wend. 282, 284; Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. 175.

The rule, as recognized by us, is sanctioned by the leading authorities in the other states. 1 Pars. on Cont. 623; 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. (Hare & Wallace's Ed.) 307; Shaw v. Berry, 31 Me. 478; Sibley v. Aldrich, 33 N. H. 533; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 427; Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. 280; Towson v. Havre de Grace Bank, 6 Harr. & Johns. 47; Thickston v. Howard, 8 Blackf. 535, 537; Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Monr. 72.

A shade of doubt has, at times, been thrown over the question, by the unguarded language of elementary writers and especially by the suggestion of Judge Story, in his treatise on the law of bailments, that the innkeeper could exonerate himself from liability by proving that he was not guilty of actual negligence; and this view seems to have been adopted in two of the Vermont, and one of the English, cases. Story on Bailments, sec. 472; Dawson v. Champney, 8 Adolphus & Ellis, N. S. 164; Merrit v. Claghorn, 23 Vt. 177; McDaniels v. Robinson, 28 id. 337.

* * * No degree of diligence or vigilance on the part of the innkeeper could absolve him from his common law obligation for the loss of his guest, unless traceable to one of these exceptional causes. Shaw v. Berry, 31 Me. 478; Sibley v. Aldrich, 33 N. H. 533. * * *

The doctrine of these cases is opposed to the general current of English and American authority, and evidently had its origin in a misapprehension of the rule as stated by the judges in Calve's case. It is true that the liability of the innkeeper, by the custom of the realm, was not unlimited and absolute, and that the loss of the goods of the guest was merely presumptive evidence of the default of the landlord. But this presumption could only be repelled by proof that the loss was attributable to the negligence or fraud of the guest, or to the act of God or the public enemy.

Innkeepers are still insurers of the safety of the property of their guests, notwithstanding the act of 1855 (chap. 421, p. 774); the only effect of that statute being to so far modify their common law liability that it does not extend to money, jewels or ornaments not deposited in the safe, provided for that purpose, where the innkeeper has complied with the provisions of the act on his part.

The liability is not limited to such an amount of money as may be reasonably necessary for the traveling expenses of the guest, but covers whatever amount may be received and deposited by the innkeeper in the safe.

The plaintiff, being a guest at the defendant's inn delivered a package, containing $20,000, to a young man in charge of the office, to be deposited in the safe. It was enclosed in a sealed envelope, and the name of the guest was written in pencil on the outside; but no indorsement indicated its contents or value. The notices posted in the rooms of the inn required that valuable packages should be "properly labeled." The plaintiff was asked what the envelope contained, and replied "money." It was received and placed in the safe, and was subsequently stolen therefrom. Held, that the defendants were liable to the full amount of the moneys so deposited. Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 112, rev'g. 3 Rob. 352.

From opinion.—"Is there any basis in principle or in the authorities for the distinction made by the defendant, to wit, that an innkeeper is liable only for such an amount of money as is necessary for the reasonable expenses of the guest? This distinction is sought to be maintained upon the analogy to the case of a carrier of passengers, who is liable only for money or articles convenient to the traveler on his journey, and not for goods or merchandise as such. I will cite a few among the many cases reported in the English courts, as well as in those of this state, to show that this distinction cannot be maintained. I think it will appear that the innkeeper is liable to the guest for the value of all his property lost, whether it be intended for his personal convenience, or for traffic, or for any other general or permanent purpose.

"The law was correctly laid down by Lord Coke in Calve's case, more than 250 years since. 8 Co. Rep. 203, 32a. That case contains an abstract of the law touching the liabilities of innkeepers. 'It was resolved per totam curiam this term. 1. That if a man comes to a common inn, and delivers his horse to the hostler, and requires him to be put to pasture, which is done accordingly, and the horse is stolen, the innholder shall not answer for it. 2. The words are corum bona et catalla infra hospitium, and because the horse which, at the request of the owner is put to pasture, is not infra hospitium, the innholder is not bound by law to answer for him if he be stolen out of the pasture * * * but it was holden that if the owner doth not require it, but the innholder, of his own head, puts the guest's horse to grass, he shall answer for him if he be stolen. * * * 3. Although the words corum bona et catalla do not, of their proper nature, extend to charters and evidences concerning freehold, or inheritance or obligations, or other deeds or specialties, being things in action, yet, in this case, it is expounded by the latter words to extend to them; and, therefore, if one brings a bag or chest, etc., of evidences into the inn, as obligations, deeds, or other specialties, and by default of the innkeeper they are taken away, the innkeeper shall answer for them, and the writ shall be bona catalla generally, and the declaration shall be special.'

"In Bennet v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273, the case was this: The plaintiff's servant had taken a quantity of goods to market to sell. Being unable to dispose of them, he went with them to defendant's inn, and asked the defendant's wife if he could leave the goods there till the next market day, the week following. She replied that she could not tell, for they were very full of parcels. The servant then sat down, had some liquor, and put the goods on the floor immediately behind him. When he got up, after sitting a little while, the goods were missing. It will be observed that the subject here was merchandise, which the servant had taken to market, and which he wished to store until the next market day. It had none of the quality of baggage or of articles of personal convenience.

"In Kent v. Shuchard, 2 B. & Ad. 803, the head note is, 'An innkeeper is responsible for money belonging to his guest.' The plaintiff and his wife were guests at the defendant's inn. The wife left her reticule, containing money, on her bed. Returning for it in a few minutes, it was gone. The report does not state the amount of the money lost. On the trial it was urged, on behalf of the innkeeper, that he was responsible for goods and chattels only, and not for money. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. * * * The court sustained the verdict. * * *

"In Jones v. Tyler, 1 Ad. & Ellis, the horse and gig of the guest were taken in charge by the defendant's hostler, who placed the gig in the open street. The gig having been stolen, the innkeeper was held responsible.

"Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & Creswell 9, was a recovery against the innkeeper for the value of certain packages of silk which the plaintiff had and exposed for sale. The defense was attempted on the ground that the plaintiff had taken the goods under his own protection in his private room.* * *

"Of the same character are the reports in our own state. Clute v. Wiggins, 14 J. R. 175, was this: The plaintiff came to the defendant's inn with a load of wheat and barley, and was received as a guest for the night. The horses were put into the stable, and his sleigh with its contents into a wagon-house, where it was usual for the defendant to receive loads of that description. The next morning it was discovered that the wagon-house had been broken open, and the wheat and barley stolen. The innkeeper made two points. 1. That the goods had not been delivered into his special custody. 2. That he derived no profit from keeping the wheat. The recovery for the value of the grain was sustained.

"In Hallenbake v. Fish, 8 Wend. 547, the plaintiff stopped with his horse at the defendant's inn, and upon calling for his horse, his saddle and bridle could not be found. The plaintiff brought trover for the saddle and bridle. The Supreme Court held, that in trover, he must prove an actual conversion, and that a conversion was not sufficiently proved. They say, that upon the facts presented, there could be no doubt that an action on the case upon the custom, would have lain against the defendant.

"In Piper v. Many, 21 Wend. 283, the plaintiff, with his horses and a sleigh-load of butter, stopped at the defendant's inn. A portion of his butter was stolen during the night. The defendant endeavored to protect himself on the ground that the butter was not brought within the inn, but was left in the yard. The court held the defendant liable.

"So recently as the year 1865, in Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571, a similar case was presented. The plaintiff's servant, with his horses, wagon, and a load of buckskin goods, stopped for the night at the defendant's inn. A fire occurred during the night, by which the property was destroyed. It did not appear how the fire originated, and there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. The defendant was held to be responsible.

"On the general principle, see, also, Story Com. secs. 480-1; 2 Bl. Com. 430; 2 Kent's Com. 593.

"The cases cited, show that the distinction contended for by the defendant's counsel cannot be maintained. I am not aware of a single reported case which sustains it, nor of any elementary writer, who gives countenance to it."

Sheep put to pasture under direction of a guest are not infra hospitium and innkeeper is not liable for their loss in absence of negligence. Hawley v. Smith, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 642.

Servant of innkeeper admitted a fellow guest to a guest's room, simply because she had seen the former in the room with the latter conversing about the goods in question. Proprietor was liable for theft. Jacobi v. Haynes, 14 Misc. 15.

Delivery of a boarder's trunk to an unknown expressman who simply showed a slip of paper with her name on it and without requiring its being given up or ascertaining his name or license number, without other warrant than such boarder's statement that she would send an expressman for the trunk, was held to be gross negligence. George v. Depierris, 17 Misc. 400.

A special agreement as to price per week for room at a hotel for an indefinite time does not alter the relation of innkeeper and his liability for the loss of goods. Metzger v. Schnabel, 23 Misc. 698.

Guest hung up his coat at a place in the office usually used for that purpose, in the presence of one apparently in charge. It was held to be "specially intrusted" to the hotel keeper's care and custody within N. Y. L. 1883, ch. 227, sec. 2. Bradner v. Mullen, 27 Misc. 479.

Innkeepers are not insurers of goods of a guest, but prima facie are liable for loss of the same. Fowler v. Dorton, 24 Barb. 384.

Goods are within possession of innkeeper although not delivered into his special keeping. Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175.

Under sec. 1859 of Cal. Civ. Code, providing that an innkeeper is liable for the loss of personal property of guest's placed in his care, unless caused by "irresistible superhuman cause," an innkeeper is liable for loss occasioned by an accidental fire unless started by lightning or some superhuman agency. Fay v. Pacific Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253. Compare Chicago & C. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 285; Moore v. Development Co., 87 Ala. 183.

After innkeeper has accepted money according to notice and deposited it in his safe, and it has been stolen, he cannot object as to the kind and amount so taken. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557. See Mateer v. Brown, 1 id. 221.

In law there is an implied contract with a common innkeeper to secure his guests' goods in his inn; and loss of an overcoat deposited on the shelf at direction of servant is chargeable to the innkeeper. Rockwell v. Proctor, 39 Ga. 105.

Innkeepers are not insurers of goods of a guest, but prima facie are liable for the loss of same. Johnson v. Richardson, 17 Ill. 302; Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102; Hulbert v. Hartman, 79 Ill. App. 289.

Hotel keeper, to whom checks were given by a guest, employed an expressman to bring the baggage to the hotel. Was liable for its loss by the expressman, though it never reached the hotel. Williams v. Moore, 69 Ill. App. 618.

Innkeeper was liable for not only such baggage as is usually carried by a traveller but for articles of merchandise also. Liability began with their receipt at the hotel, though owner was only a prospective guest. Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102.

Innkeepers are not insurers of goods of a guest, but prima facie are liable for the loss of the same. Laird v. Eichold, 10 Ind. 212.

Is liable for the theft of goods, theft of valise containing valuables. Bowell v. De Wald, 2 Ind. App. 303.

Money in trunk of guest for loss of which landlord is sued, should be such an amount only as would be convenient to meet his traveling expenses. Simon v. Miller, 7 La. Ann. 360.

A horse belonging to a guest at an inn and stabled in the inn's hostelry was injured; the court held, that while innkeepers were not insurers of goods, they are nevertheless responsible for the well and safe-keeping of them; and an instruction that the defendant was not liable, if he was found to be without fault, was error. Shaw v. Berry, 31 Me. 478.

See Story on Bailments, sec. 472; Bennett v. Miller, 5 Term. R. 273; but see, if guest's servant, or companion makes way with the goods. Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & Sel. 306; see, also, Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. N. Y. 175; also, Shultz v. Wall, 134 Pa. St. 262.

Innkeepers are insurers of goods, except for loss caused by act of God, the public enemy, neglect or fault of owner or his servants. So, innkeeper is liable for loss of guest's overcoat hung in a place allotted for that purpose. Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163.

Loss of cow taken by innkeeper for safe keeping over night chargeable to him. Hilton v. Adams, 71 Me. 19.

Plaintiff, a guest in defendant's inn, cannot recover for valuables left in bath-house apart from the inn, and kept by defendant for convenience of persons bathing in the sea. Minor v. Staples, 71 Me. 316.

Under statute limiting the liability of an innholder for losses of "wearing apparel, articles worn or carried upon the person to a reasonable amount, personal baggage and money necessary for traveling expenses and personal use," an innholder is liable for the loss of a gold watch, a pair of gold bracelets, a gold thimble, some gold rings and a gold neckpin, carried by a female traveler in her trunk and stolen therefrom at the defendant's inn. Noble v. Milliken, 77 Me. 359. See, Noble v. Milliken, 74 Me. 225.

Delivery at a livery stable at innkeeper's direction is delivery to him for safe keeping, though the stable is not connected with the inn. Cohen v. Manuel, 91 Me. 274.

Money in trunk of guest, for loss of which landlord is sued, should be such an amount only as would be convenient to meet his traveling expenses. Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130.

See Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, ante p. 138.

Is liable for theft of horse and chaise belonging to a guest. Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. 280; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 61 Mass. 417.

Innkeeper held not liable for loss by accidental fire. Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 259.

Innkeeper was liable for loss of $500 kept in a belt upon guest's person. Smith v. Wilson, 36 Minn. 334.

Valuables gratuitously received for safe keeping by innkeeper imposes liability for gross negligence only. Wiser v. Chesley, 53 Mo. 549.

Whether a guest deposits money on the credit of the inn or not is for the jury; if he deposits it on the credit of the inn, the innkeeper is liable for its loss. Houser v. Tulley, 62 Pa. St. 92. Sneider v. Geiss, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 34.

Is liable for money of guest stolen while in defendant's inn. Shultz v. Wall, 134 Pa. St. 262; Houser v. Tulley, 62 Pa. St. 92; Walsh v. Porterfield, 87 Pa. St. 376.

No recovery was allowed for loss of horses by fire where the fire was the work of an incendiary. Merritt v. Claghorn, 23 Vt. 177.

(c). WHEN THE RELATIONSHIP EXISTS.

The liability of an innkeeper as an insurer, presupposes the relation of host and guest.

He is not responsible, except as an ordinary bailee for hire, for the safe keeping of a horse left at the inn stable for the night, by one who is neither a lodger nor a guest.

The innkeeper was not liable for the loss of the horse, by a fire which consumed the stable, the proprietor being free from negligence. Ingalls-lee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577, aff'g 36 Barb. 452, disapproving. Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. 280.

From opinion.—"As there was no negligence on the part of the intestate, he was not liable for the loss, unless he was an insurer of the property. There was no express contract of insurance, and none can be implied, unless it sprung from the relation of innkeeper and guest. No such relation existed between the parties. The horse was left at the stable by one who was not, and did not expect to be, a guest at the inn. There was no contract, either express or implied, except for the keeping of the animal for the night; and this created no other or greater liability than if the intestate, instead of being an innkeeper, had been the proprietor of a livery stable. The liveryman, like the agistor, has no lien on the property committed to his charge. Grimmell v. Cook, 3 Hill 486, 492; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. 41; Wallace v. Woodgate, 1 Car. & Payne, 575; Jackson v. Cummins, 5 Mees. & Wels. 342. * * *

"The theory of the appellant, that one who contracts for the stabling of his horse by an innkeeper, is constructively an inmate of his house, is supported by a case reported in Massachusetts, but we think that decision was made under a misapprehension of the law. Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. 280. Its correctness has since been questioned by the court in which it was pronounced. Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 425-6. The authorities, on which it rests for support, were fully considered in the able opinions delivered by Judge Bronson, in the case of Grimmell v. Cook, and by Judges Potter and Bockes in the present case in the court below, and we think their reasoning conclusive against the doctrine, that an innkeeper can be held as an insurer of property, received from one who is neither traveler nor guest."

Owner of stallion for certain days hired a stall at an inn; the price of oats and meals was reduced, but there was no agreement as to lodging, hay or use of stall. The plaintiff kept the horse under lock and took care of him. Defendant was not liable as innkeeper, hence as insurer, for accidental fire. Mowers v. Fethers, 61 N. Y. 34, rev'g. 6 Lansing, 112 and judg't for pl'ff.

From opinion.—"An innkeeper at common law, has been said to be the keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travelers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. 5 Bacon Abr. (Inns, etc.) 228; Story on Bailments, § 475. The person or persons undertaking this public employment were bound to take in and receive all travelers and wayfaring persons, and to entertain them for a reasonable compensation, if by any possibility they could be accommodated, and the innkeeper was bound to guard the goods of his guests with proper diligence. 5 Term. R. 274; 2 Barn. & Ad. 285; 1 Carr. & K. 404; 7 Carr. & P. 213; 4 Exch. 367. The common-law rule has been generally followed by the courts in this country, save so far as it has been modified by statute. The duties, rights and responsibilities of an innkeeper are in most respects kindred to those of a common carrier, but in order to enforce the strict common-law liability of an innkeeper, the technical relation of guest and innkeeper must be established, and the question is, whether it existed in the present case. I think it did not, for reasons now to be suggested. * * *

"He is doubtless bound to receive and entertain a strolling peddler, and securely guard his pack of trinkets if brought infra hospitium, so long as he remains a mere guest. So, also, would he be bound to receive and entertain a wayfarer, encumbered with a stallion, but under no obligation as an innkeeper to allow his curtilage to be turned into an asylum for the breeding of horses. It is very manifest in this case that the sojourn of the plaintiff, Eggner, with the horse, at the defendant's inn, was not that of an ordinary traveler. The purpose and object was entirely different, and the defendant, as an innkeeper, was under no common law obligation to receive and entertain the plaintiff, Eggner, and his horse for such a purpose, and where he is not bound to receive and entertain the person as his guest, the strict rule of common-law liability for the preservation of his property does not obtain. The obligation to respond to injury to property, depends upon his duty to receive and entertain as an innkeeper, and they must stand or fall together. Grennell v. Cook, 3 Hill 485; Ingalsbee v. Wood, 36 Barb. 455; s. c., 33 N. Y. 577; Hulett v. Swift, id. 571. * * *

"The case of Washburn v. Jones, 14 Barb. 193, has no analogy to this. There the defendant was made liable for negligence in fact in the construction of the stall, by reason of which the horse received the injury, and that liability would follow if he was to be regarded merely as an ordinary bailee."

From opinion of Supreme Court, contra.—"Some of the authorities hold that where there is a stipulated contract as to time, price, etc., the party is a boarder, but when he is at the inn without any bargain he is a guest. 1 Par. on Con. 628; Thompson v. Lacy, 3 Barn. & Ald. 283; Parkhurst v. Foster, 1 Salk, 387; Dausey v. Rich, 2 Ellis & Bl. 144; King v. Ives, 7 C. & P. 213; Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. 247; Crommell v. Stevens, 3 Abb. N. S. 34; Stewart v. McReady, 24 How. 62; Bennett v. Ditson, 5 Term. 273; Manning v. Wells, 9 Thomp. 746. A careful examination of the cases cited evinces that the contract was entire, covering the whole case; while, in the case at bar, the agreement only embraced a portion of the accommodations to be furnished by the defendant, and which the plaintiff, Eggner, actually had. The meals and the oats only were provided for, while the rest remained to be determined upon a mere question of value. It was not enough that the price for the meals and the oats was agreed upon, for fixing a price per day for a sojourner at an inn does not make him a boarder, or anything but a guest. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 23 Cal. 557; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Maine 169; Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 225. Nor does the fact that Eggner, one of the plaintiffs, was to take care of the horse, make him any the less a guest. In Seymour v. Cook, 53 Barb. 451; 35 How. 180, the guest led the horses out of the stable, when one of them was kicked and injured, and it was held that the innkeeper was liable. The same principle has been applied to actions brought against common carriers for the loss of or injury to property. Mallory v. Tioga R. R. Co., 39 Barb. 488; Medgett v. Bay State, 1 Daly, 151; Cavle's Case, 3 Coke, 32, 33a. Nor is it important how often Eggner came there, or whether he came regularly. Bac. Ab. tit. Ins. Co. 5. The length of time is not material. 5 Tenn. 273. 5 Barb. 563; Allen v. Smith, 12 C. B. (N. S.), 104; Eng. C. L. 630; Walling v. Potter, 9 Ann. L. Reg. (N. S.) 618. The purpose for which the horse was used is also of no consequence. 33 Cal. supra, 602; 7 Cush. supra, 423." See Washburn v. Jones, 14 Barb. 193.

Persons belonging to the army and navy, who have no permanent residence they can call home, are to be regarded as travelers when stopping at public inns; to deprive them of their privileges as such, and to give to them the character of boarders merely, it must appear that an explicit contract was made to that effect.

Plaintiff and her husband H., who was an officer in the United States army, having no permanent home, but living where military duty called him, occupied rooms in the defendant's hotel under an agreement, by which they were to so occupy, upon terms specified, until the spring or summer following, provided everything was satisfactory, and the husband was not sooner ordered away on military duty. H. and family took their meals at the hotel restaurant, paying for each meal the same as other guests. No notice was posted in said rooms as prescribed by the Innkeepers Act (Chap. 421, Laws of 1855). In an action to recover the value of property of plaintiff, stolen from said rooms while so occupied, held, the facts justified a finding that the relation between the parties was that of innkeeper and guest; and so that defendants were liable.*

It appeared that the defendants kept separate apartments for boarders and for transient persons, and that H. and family were registered among the former. Held, in the absence of proof that H. was aware of this fact, defendant's liability was not affected thereby. Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, aff'g 17 Hun, 279, and judg't for pl'ff, distinguishing Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush. 41; Manning v. Wells, 9 Humph. 746; Hursh v. Byers, 29 Mo. 469; Pollock v. Landis, 36 Iowa 651; Lusk v. Belotte, 22 Minn. 468.

From opinion.—"The authorities hold beyond question that the fixing of the price does not make a party a boarder. See Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 169; Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183. * * *

'The length of time that a man is at an inn makes no difference, whether he stays a week, or a month or longer; so although he is not strictly transient, he retains his character as a traveler,' but he may, by a special contract to board and sojourn, make himself a boarder, and being such the innkeeper is not liable. Story on Bail, sec. 477; 2 Pars. on Contracts, 150 et seq. The decisions have not been entirely harmonious as to whether fixing in advance the price to be paid and the length of the stay has the effect in law to constitute such person a mere boarder or lodger, and to deprive such visitor of the character of guest. There are numerous decisions in the books of recent date which hold that where there is a special agreement as to time and price that does not absolutely disturb the relationship of innkeeper and guest. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557; Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Maine 169; Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316. See, also, Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 255. These cases indicate a tendency in the * Chap. 253, Laws 1894, provided—Sec. (1) "Whenever the keeper of any hotel or inn shall receive into his hotel or inn any person as a boarder, he shall have lien upon and right to detain the baggage and effects of such boarder to the same extent and in the same manner as if such boarder had been received as a guest; and such lien may be enforced in the manner prescribed by law for the enforcement of a lien upon the baggage or effects of a guest." This act was repealed by the Lien Law, Laws 1897, ch. 418, which, in § 71, provides for liens of hotel, inn, boarding and lodging house keepers.

courts to conform the old rule to the changes made in hotel keeping in modern times.

We are referred by the learned counsel for the appellants to numerous cases to sustain the doctrine he contends for, among which are: Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush. (Ky.) 41; Manning v. Wells, 9 Hump. (Tenn.) 746; Hursh v. Byers, 29 Mo. 469; Pollock v. Landis, 36 Iowa 651; Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468, and others. A careful examination of these authorities discloses that in each of them it is very apparent that the relation of landlord and guest did not exist, and that the party who claimed damages of the innkeeper was in every case a boarder beyond any question, and that in most, if not in all of them, there was a special contract as to time and price which established that relationship."

Horses are not given into the innkeeper's custody, so as to make him responsible for their safe keeping, where they are tied under his shed without notifying him or his servants of their presence or requesting attention to them. Bradley Livery Co. v. Snook, (N. J. L.), 50 Atl. Rep. 358; s. c., 55 L. R. A. 208.

1. WHO IS A GUEST.

Innkeeper was liable when goods of guest were deposited, by direction of former's servant, in uninclosed space near highway. Piper v. Manny, 21 Wend. 282.

An innkeeper may refuse to receive goods for lodgers from third persons, but if he does receive them he will be liable as an innkeeper.

Goods of a firm deposited by a member thereof, as a guest, makes innkeeper responsible to firm. Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith, 54.

One purchasing liquor at an inn is a guest. McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 Barb. 560.

Contract for board at less than customary prices does not destroy relation of innkeeper and guest. Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323.

For failure to make a special contract with a guest as required by statute, innkeeper would not be entitled to receive compensation for such a one's lodging; but would be liable as innkeeper for loss of guest's goods, even though no license has been taken out as required. Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587.

A traveler who enters an inn as a guest does not cease to be such by (1) proposing to remain a certain number of days, or (2) by paying in advance. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557.

A rule of the house to charge guests a less rate per diem weekly when he remains more than a week not brought to the notice of a guest does not make him a boarder, instead of a guest. Magee v. Pacific Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 678.

The fact that one staying at an inn lives in the same town where the inn is situated will not relieve the proprietor from an innkeeper's liability. Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183.

Though not a traveler, one who receives transient accommodation at an inn is a guest. Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183.

Where porter gave traveler check for his baggage at depot, and it was lost while being conveyed to hotel by carrier. The latter became entitled to rights of guest. Caskeney v. Nagle, 83 Ga. 696.

See, for distinction between guest and boarder, Shoecraft v. Bailey, 25 Iowa, 553.

Innkeeper is liable for loss of guest's horse, chaise and harness. Committing the same to innkeeper to be fed constitutes him a guest although he himself does not lodge there nor take any refreshment there. Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280. See McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316.

A traveler received as a guest does not become a boarder by making an agreement for the price of his board by the week. Berkshire &c. Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417.

See, also, Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 495.

The jury should decide in a doubtful case whether a person is a guest or a boarder. Ross v. Mellin, 36 Minn. 421.

A trunk left on platform erected by hotel for reception of guests' baggage is infra hospitium and innkeeper is liable for its loss. Maloney v. Bacon, 33 Mo. App. 501.

A guest is a wayfarer who stops at an inn and is accepted. Manning v. Wells, 9 Hump. (Tenn.) 746.

A guest at an inn is one who seeks rest or lodging for a night or a day. Comer v. State, 26 Tex. App. 509.

If a man retains his status as a traveler, neither the length of his stay nor an agreement for board by the day or week will change his relation from that of guest to that of boarder. Jailie v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 119.

2. WHO IS NOT A GUEST.

One who is not otherwise a guest cannot hold the proprietor to an innkeeper's liability for the loss of his horse left at the stable of the inn for the night. Ingallsbee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577.

A person attending an entertainment at an inn upon invitation and payment is not a guest so as to bind the innkeeper as such for injury to such person's horse, although he may be liable for negligence. Fitch v. Casler, 17 Hun, 126. See Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52.

Peddler who left his pack at an inn by consent of innkeeper without engaging room or food cannot charge the liability of innkeeper for the loss of it. Toub v. Schmid, 60 Hun. 409.

Innkeeper is not liable for goods left at his house by one not a guest. Centlivre v. Ryder, Edm. Select Cas. (N. Y.) 273.

Innkeeper is not liable for loss of coat of one dining at the hotel on invitation of a guest. Gastenhoper v. Clair, 10 Daly (N. Y.), 265.

Plaintiff sold out her business and removed to defendant's town where she engaged rooms and board for so much a month, staying there for six months. She was a boarder and not a guest. Haff v. Adams, (Ariz.) 59 Pac. Rep. 111.

Not liable for goods of guest, left to be called for on his return, after settling his bill and departing. O'Brien v. Vaill, 22 Fla. 627.

Hotel proprietor is liable as innkeeper for guest's baggage a reasonable time after his departure. Adams v. Clein, 41 Ga. 67.

See, also, Hayes v. Turner, 23 Iowa, 214.

Regular boarder by the week deposited gold with hotel keeper, who put it with his own valuables in his safe, and the court held that he was not liable as innkeeper, plaintiff not being a traveler or guest. Johnson v. Reynolds, 3 Kas. 257.

Persons who enter the house of a licensed innholder for the purpose of procuring drinks are not guests. Commonwealth v. Moore, 145 Mass. 244.

An innkeeper is not liable to one, for the loss of overcoat and gloves, who buys a ticket to a ball given at defendant's inn by a fire company. The fact that during the night he spent money for liquor and cigars in the saloon of the inn does not affect the question. Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52.

Liability of innkeeper as insurer is only in favor of travelers; so where persons entered defendant's hotel in August and remained until October following, the proprietor was not liable for jewelry of theirs stolen while in the hotel. Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468.

One who was a guest in an inn, but to avoid payment of bill while absent a day had his name checked off the register, cannot recover for valise left in a friend's room and stolen while he was away. Miller v. Peebles, 60 Miss. 819.

Plaintiff, without an intention to occupy a room, engaged one for the purpose of securing a place of safety for his valuables, depositing them with the clerk of the inn. Was not a guest. Bunn v. Johnson, 77 Mo. App. 596.

One whose only business in a hotel is to deposit his money there for safe keeping, is not a guest and cannot hold the proprietor to an innkeeper's liability for the loss of it. Arcade Hotel Co. v. Wiatt, 44 Oh. St. 32.

Innkeeper was held not liable for loss of hats of guests of a club which contracted with the former for a dinner, though they had been registered and assigned a room. Aney v. Winchester, 68 N. H. 447; s. c., 39 L. R. A. 760.

Where money of guest was left with clerk, after his bill had been paid, the relationship had ceased and hotelkeeper was not liable. Whitemore v. Haroldson, 2 Lea (Tenn.), 312.

Plaintiff, to entertain a friend, removed with his family from his home to a hotel in the same city and engaged rooms and board for two or three weeks at boarders' rate and was assigned to rooms on the regular boarders' floor. He was a boarder and not a guest. Meacham v. Galloway, 102 Tenn. 415.

(d). WHAT IS AN INN.

Where no license could be issued for the sale of liquors except to an innkeeper, if defendant admits he has a license, he will be held to an innkeeper's liability for loss of guest's property. Korn v. Schedler, 11 Daly, 234. Kopper v. Willis, 9 Daly, 460.

A hotel having a cafe where guests may take their meals and pay for them is an inn. Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.), 200.

A person who, without contract, as to terms or definite period of remaining, receives whoever comes, is an innkeeper. Taylor v. Monnat, 4 Duer (N. Y.), 116.

One providing temporary accommodations for emigrants is an innkeeper. Willard v. Reingardt, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 148.

Lodging house, with arrangements for meals, if desired, is an inn. Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.), 200; Bernstein v. Sweeney, 1 J. & S. (N. Y.) 271.

Defendant ran a "European Cafe" with a hotel attachment. Plaintiff engaged rooms but took her meals elsewhere. Defendant was liable as an innkeeper. Bullock v. Adair, 63 Ill. App. 30.

A house used for accommodating boarders and travelers for pay is an inn. St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593.

(e). WHAT IS NOT AN INN.

A boarding house keeper is not an insurer, like an innkeeper, of his guest's goods, but where the same were purloined he is only answerable for negligence. Seigman v. Keeler, 4 Misc. (N. Y.) 528.

A building used strictly as a lodging house in which there is no arrangement for boarding guests is not an inn. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.), 15.

A restaurant, where meals are only furnished, is not an inn. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. 311; Carpenter v. Taylor, 1 Hilt. 193.

Parlor car company is not liable as an innkeeper. Welsh v. Pullman &c. Co., 16 Abb. U. S. 352; Pullman &c. Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360.

In Wharton on Negligence it is said that such companies are by a weight of authority, regarded as ordinary bailees for hire. Sections 610 and 680, citing, Palmer v. Wagner, 11 Alb. L. J. 149; Pfaelzer v. Car Co., 1 Weekly Notes, 240; s. c., 2 Weekly Notes, 324. But it was held that a sleeping car company so far as it renders service similar in kind to that furnished by an innkeeper is subject to the same liabilities; overcoat left in care of porter was lost. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 28 Neb. 239. (See Common Carriers of Passengers, post 360.)

Customer at a restaurant was held not to be a guest at an inn. Sheffer v. Willoughby, 61 Ill. App. 263; s. c. aff'd, 163 Ill. 518.

The proprietor of a private boarding house is a private housekeeper. Smith v. Amcannon, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 311.

A farmer, yielding to the laws of hospitality and taking in travelers for a compensation is not necessarily an innkeeper; the question as to whether he is an innkeeper is for the jury. Howe v. Franklin, 20 Tex. 798.

(f). *LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

A personal notice to a guest that a safe is provided for money, &c., and that unless so deposited the innkeeper will not be liable, is equivalent to posting a notice in the guest's room as provided by ch. 42, L. 1855. Independently of the statute, it is negligence for the guest to leave two thousand dollars ($2,000) in his room in the city of New York after such notice. Purris v. Coleman & Stetson, 21 N. Y. 111 aff'g judg't for def't. See, Classen v. Leopold, 2 Sweeny, 705.

An innkeeper who provides a safe for money and jewels of the guests

* Note. Chapter 27 of the Laws of 1883, amended by chapter 285 of the Laws of 1892, N. Y., provides:

Sec. (1). Whenever the proprietor or proprietors of any hotel or inn shall provide a safe in the office of such hotel, or other convenient place for the safe-keeping of any money, jewels or ornaments belonging to the guest of such hotel or inn, and shall notify the guest thereof by posting a notice (stating the fact that such safe is provided, in which such money, jewels or ornaments may be deposited) in a public and conspicuous place and manner in the office and public room, and in the public parlors of such hotel; and, if such guest shall neglect to deliver such money, jewels or ornaments to the person in charge of such office for deposit in such safe, the proprietor or proprietors of such hotel shall not be liable for any loss of such money, jewels or ornaments sustained by such guest by theft or otherwise; but no hotel proprietor or lessee shall be obliged to receive property on deposit for safe-keeping exceeding five hundred dollars in value; and if such guest shall deliver such money, jewels or ornaments to the person in charge of such office for deposit in such safe, said proprietor or proprietors shall not be liable for any loss thereof, sustained by such guest, by theft or otherwise, in any sum exceeding the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, unless by special agreement in writing by proprietor or manager.

Sec. (2). No hotel-keeper shall be liable to any guest for loss of wearing apparel, goods or merchandise for any sum exceeding the sum of five hundred dollars, where it shall appear that such loss occurred without the fault or negligence of such hotel-keeper; nor shall he be liable in any sum for the loss of any article or articles of wearing apparel, cane, umbrella, satchel, valise, box, bag, bundle or other chattel belonging to such guest, and not within a room assigned to him, unless the same shall be specially intrusted to the care and custody of such hotel-keeper or his servants.

and posts a notice thereof in the room, pursuant to statute, that he shall not then be liable for the loss thereof, is not liable for money not so deposited. Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258, aff'g order rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

At common law, innkeepers are insurers of the property of their guests.

Under our statutes (Laws of 1855, chap. 42) innkeepers who have provided a safe, and posted notices of the fact in accordance with the act, are exonerated from liability for "money, jewels and ornaments" of a guest not deposited in the safe.

But the exemption is limited to the particular species of property named, and being in derogation of the common law, cannot be extended in its application by doubtful construction.

Held, accordingly, that the watch of a guest at an inn, worn and used by him in the ordinary manner, is neither a "jewel or ornament" within the meaning of the act, and that the innkeeper is liable for the loss thereof in the room of the guest, notwithstanding his compliance with the act of 1855. Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539. See, Burnstein v. Sweeney, 1 J. & S. 271.

Plaintiff, a guest in defendant's hotel, offered to the bookkeeper a large package containing jewelry, and without stating its contents, requested him to deposit it in the safe. The bookkeeper replied that it was not necessary, and requested plaintiff to take it to his room, saying, it would be just as safe there. When plaintiff was ready to leave, he packed his trunk, in which the package then was, delivered up the key of his room to the hotel clerk, and requested the trunk to be brought down immediately. This was not done; and upon plaintiff's calling for it shortly after it was found broken open and the package stolen. Held, that defendant could not be held responsible for a refusal to receive; but that there was a "neglect to deposit" within the meaning of the innkeepers' act of 1855. Laws of 1855, chap. 421.

That said act, however, only relieves the hotel proprietor from losses occasioned by such neglect; and that, as in this case, the loss happened at a time when the package, if it had been deposited, would have been returned to the guest to be packed prior to departure, defendant was liable.

A considerable portion of the property recovered for, was neither money, jewels, or ornaments, and hence, the landlord was not exempt from liability for the loss thereof, under this statute. It was neither within the statute or the notices posted in the hotel. Bendetsou v. French, 46 N. Y. 266, rev'g 44 Barb. 31 and aff'g judg't for pl'ff. See Stanton v. Leland, 4 E. D. Smith 88; Kellogg v. Sweeney, 46 N. Y. 291, modifying 1 Lans. 397 and judg't for pl'ff.

*Chap. 658, L. 1866, exempts an innkeeper for loss by fire in a barn and outstanding building, caused by an incendiary and without negligence. The burden is on the innkeeper to show both facts. Evidence showed that the door was open into the loft and the lumber left so that the incendiary could get in. This was sufficient to sustain a verdict of negligence. Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 317, rev'g 2 Hun, 521 and judg't for pl'ff for rejection of evidence: citing. Dausey v. Richardson, 3 E. & B. 165; Schwerin v. McKie, 51 Hun, 180.

A statute providing that innkeepers, who furnish a safe place of deposit for valuables and notify guests, shall not be liable for loss of valuables not so deposited, being enacted for the protection of proprietors of hotels, may be waived; and, where the rooming clerk was the manager of the hotel and authorized plaintiff's assignor to leave her jewelry in her room, he was deemed to have waived it. Freidman v. Breslin, 51 App. Div. 268; s. c. aff'd, 169 N. Y. 514.

A watch is neither "money, jewels or ornament" of a guest under a statute providing that they must be deposited with the innkeeper, to charge him with their safe keeping. Becker v. Warner, 90 Hun, 187.

Nor are silver forks, a silver ladle with the coat of arms of Virginia engraved thereon and a gold watch with a picture of the owner's mother inside, all locked in a trunk. Briggs v. Todd, 28 Misc. 208.

Under a statute providing that, when an innkeeper shall provide a safe, and post a notice of the same in the rooms, the guest shall bear the loss of money not deposited in the safe, it was held that the proprietor is not liable for loss of any money not so deposited. Hyatt v. Taylor, 51 Barb. 632; s. c. aff'd, 42 N. Y. 258. See Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. 70.

When a guest subscribes a register, at the head of the page of which is an agreement exempting innkeeper from liability for valuables not deposited, etc., the latter is not so exempted, unless guest had knowledge thereof or assented thereto at the time of signing. Bernstein v. Sweeney, 1 J. & S. 271.

Merely posting of notice in guest's room will not limit innkeeper's liability. Bodwell v. Bragg, 29 Iowa 232.

A notice on a register on which guests wrote their names, that money, coats, etc., must be left at the office, otherwise proprietor is not responsible, was not a publication as required by statute, and would not relieve innkeeper from liability. Murchison v. Sergeant, 69 Ga. 206.

As to the construction of Mass. Pub. Stats. chap. 102, secs. 12-16, limiting common law liability of innkeepers, see the following cases.

*NOTE.—The duty of hotel keepers to provide fire escapes is governed by § 40 of the Domestic Commerce Law, N. Y. Laws 1893, ch. 376.

Burbank v. Chapin, 140 Mass. 123; Spring v. Hagar, 145 Mass. 186; Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. Rep. 441.

The statutory notice to limit liability, to be effective, must be brought to the knowledge of the guest, so that his assent may be presumed. Olson v. Crossman, 31 Minn. 222.

Where the statute permits innkeeper to limit his liability by posting notices, the notices must be not only printed and posted as pursuant to the statute, but must observe all the requirements thereof. Porter v. Gilky, 57 Mo. 235.

See, also, Batterson v. Vogel, 8 Mo. App. 24.

A statute requiring notice to innkeeper of merchandise of guest for sale or sample in the inn, is satisfied by nothing short of a written notice. Fisher v. Kelsey, 16 Fed. Rep. 71.

(g). RULES AND REGULATIONS AND DISOBEDIENCE THEREOF.

Innkeepers may make reasonable rules and regulations for safe keeping of goods, but they must be clear and specific. Van Wyck v. Howard, 12 How. Pr. 147.

When guest neglects to deposit baggage when directed, innkeeper is not liable. Wilson v. Halpin, 1 Daly (N. Y.), 496; s. c., 30 How. Pr. 124.

A guest was allowed to recover from an innkeeper for the loss of a trunk and its contents, except valuable mineral specimens, where notice was posted in the room instructing guests to leave their valuables in the office vaults. Brown Hotel Co. v. Burckhardt, 13 Colo. App. 59.

But the fact that a place is provided for overcoats does not relieve for loss of one committed to a servant, according to known custom of house. Labold v. Southern Hotel Co., 54 Mo. App. 567.

(h). CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF GUEST.

Where guest takes exclusive custody of his property the landlord may not be liable. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 690.

Whether leaving the door unlocked and valuables exposed, or whether leaving door unlocked under circumstances likely to induce a theft of the goods, constitutes contributory negligence may be a question of fact for a jury. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 691.

A guest took a strumpet to his room, who stole part of his money; the rest he asked the clerk to take charge of, which he refused to do. His prior misconduct and contributory negligence did not prevent liability for loss of the remainder, which was subsequently stolen. Lucia v. Omel, 46 App. Div. 200; s. c. aff'd, 53 App. Div. 641.

Guest cannot recover where he exposes his goods or neglects to lock his door. Fowler v. Dolorn, 24 Barb. 384.

Guest need not lock his door to recover for theft. Buddenberg v. Benner, 1 Hilt. 84; even upon retiring for the night. Classen v. Leopold, 2 Sweeney, 705.

Guest's failure to inquire for goods delivered at the hotel for him for several days was not contributory negligence. Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102.

Innkeeper repelled presumption of negligence from loss of goods by showing that guest's room was probably unlocked. Hulbert v. Hartman, 79 Ill. App. 289.

Remaining away all night is not as matter of law contributory negligence on the part of a guest. Turner v. Whitaker, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 83.

Failure of guest to comply with reasonable rules of innkeeper brought to his knowledge will discharge innkeeper from liability for loss of goods occasioned thereby. Fuller v. Coats, 18 Oh. St. 343; Houser v. Tully, 62 Pa. St. 92.

The question of the plaintiff's negligence in laying his gloves under his overcoat on a bench in the presence of the innkeeper is for the jury. Rend v. Amidon, 41 Vt. 15.

Selection of a room, which was known by a guest to be defective and dangerous, was held contributory negligence. Glass v. Colman, 14 Wash. 635.

Guest was intoxicated and left his door unlocked. Innkeeper was, nevertheless, liable for theft by a servant. Cunningham v. Bucky, 42 W. Va. 671; s. c., 35 L. R. A. 850.

When guest neglects to lock the door of a room containing goods belonging to him, he cannot recover for loss of the same from innkeeper. Burgess v. Clements, 4 Maule & S. 306.

(i). WHEN INNKEEPER IS LIABLE AS AN ORDINARY BAILEE.

Although an innkeeper be not liable as such by statutory exemption or otherwise he will be liable for negligence as an ordinary bailee. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 689, citing Hawley v. Smith, 25 Wend. 612; Grennell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485; Hayes v. Turner, 23 Iowa, 214; Wiser v. Cheslev, 53 Mo. 549; Adams v. Clem, 41 Ga. 67.

Goods leased to another and by him deposited with innkeeper, makes innkeeper liable only as a bailee to such owner. Coykendall v. Eaton, 55 Barb. 188.

As plaintiff was a boarder and not a guest and the hotelkeeper was without negligence, he was not liable for loss. Haff v. Adams, (Ariz.) 59 Pac. Rep. 111.

Valise of guest was stolen when he was absent from the hotel. Murray v. Marshall, 9 Colo. 482.

Innkeeper liable only as naked depository for a valise left in hotel office, without attention to it, and taken by clerk to a room where baggage was kept. Stewart v. Head, 70 Ga. 449.

Although an innkeeper be not liable as such by reason of the termination of the relation he may be liable for negligence as an ordinary bailee. Hayes v. Turner, 23 Iowa, 214.

For a discussion of an innkeeper's relation toward a pedler without a license as that of an ordinary bailee, see Cohen v. Manuel, 91 Me. 274; s. c., 40 L. R. A. 491.

Innkeeper is responsible only for gross negligence when he receives valuables for deposit without hire, "that omission of care which even the most inattentive and thoughtless never fail to take of their own concerns." Wiser v. Chesley, 53 Mo. 547.

Innkeeper is liable only for negligence to members of a dinner party. Amey v. Winchester, 68 N. H. 447.

An innkeeper, having exercised due diligence, was not liable for loss by theft from a boarder. Meacham v. Galloway, 102 Tenn. 415.

Damages to goods of traveling salesman displayed in a sample room chargeable to innkeeper although full innkeeper liability does not attach as regards such goods. Scheffer v. Corson, 5 S. D. 233.

(j). WHEN LIABILITY ENDS.

Liable for injury to one horse by another, while owner is taking it from stable to depart. Seymour v. Cook, 53 Barb. 451; s. c., 35 How. Pr. 180.

But not if guest has departed without intention of returning; even if it be specially intrusted to him, innkeeper is only an ordinary bailee. Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sand. (N. Y.) 242.

Where guest leaves his valise after paying his hotel bill, without any directions, and not intimating that he intended to return, the landlord is not liable for its loss. Glenn v. Jackson, 93 Ala. 342.

But when, after departure of guest, the innkeeper delivers baggage to an unknown person, without inquiry, he is liable for the loss of it. Wear v. Gleason, 52 Ark. 364.

Innkeeper is liable for the baggage of a guest left for a reasonable time in his care after the guest's departure. Adams v. Clem, 41 Ga. 65.

Innkeeper is not liable as such if after departure of guest his trunk is delivered to the wrong person. Hays v. Turner, 23 Iowa, 214. See Grinnel v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 485.

Innkeeper is liable while guest continues to pay for his board although he be temporarily absent. McDonald v. Edgerton, 27 Vt. 171; Hays v. Turner, 23 Iowa, 214.

XI. Banks—Savings.

Mere possession of the book, delivered to a depositor by a savings bank, by a stranger or other person than the owner, does not authorize a payment of the deposit to such person. Smith v. Brooklyn Savings Bank, 101 N. Y. 58; Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1.

Yet, if the depositor has contracted that all payments may be made to one presenting the pass book, and that payment under such circumstances shall be deemed good and valid, he is bound thereby, unless the bank be chargeable with want of ordinary diligence or care. If, at the time of such payment, a fact or circumstance is brought to the knowledge of the bank's officers which is calculated to excite the suspicions and inquiry of an ordinarily careful person, it becomes the duty of the officers of the bank to institute such inquiries, and for failure to do so they may be regarded as negligent and the payment be held invalid. Gearns v. Bowery Savings Bank, 135 N. Y. 557; Kummel v. G. S. Bank, 127 id. 488; Wall v. Emigrants' Industrial Savings Bank, 64 Hun, 249; Israel v. Bowery Savings Bank, 9 Daly, 507; Sullivan v. Lewiston, etc., 56 Maine, 507; Levy v. Franklin Savings Bank, 117 Mass. 448.

And if, in connection with such contract, the bank stipulate to use its best efforts to prevent fraud, etc., more than ordinary care will be required. Allen v. Williamshburgh Savings Bank, 69 N. Y. 314.

But a depositor may not recover if he was guilty of contributory negligence, as where he furnished a stranger with the information whereby to answer test questions put by the bank upon making a payment. Wall v. Emigrants' Industrial Savings Bank, 64 Hun, 249.

A savings bank, upon the receipt of a deposit, entered the same in and delivered to the depositor a pass book containing the rules of the bank, and among others that no depositor should be paid without producing the pass book, and that all payments made to the person producing the same should be deemed good and valid payments.

The rules constituted the conditions upon which the deposit was received, and the bank was authorized to pay upon the production of the book without an order from the depositor, and where the bank is not chargeable with want of diligence or an omission of duty, such payment is binding upon the depositor although made to a wrong person.

The pass book was presented with a forged order purporting to have been signed by the depositor. The forgery was immaterial inasmuch as presentation of the book justified the payment.

The pass book provided that "the secretary will use his best efforts to prevent fraud, but all payments made to persons producing the book shall be deemed good and valid payments to the depositors respectively." The deposit was made by a female, while the person wrongfully drawing the money was a male. The judge, writing the opinion, said: "I do not discover that there was anything in the transaction to indicate that the order was forged, as upon somewhat questionable evidence the jury has found;" and, also, "The bank had the right to make the payment it did on the simple production of the pass book." Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Savings Bank, 57 N. Y. 418. [This case was criticised in Allen v. Williamsburgh Savings Bank, 69 N. Y. 318, and was distinguished in Smith v. Brooklyn Savings Bank, 101 id. 58, 63, and Kummel v. G. S. Bank, 127 id. 488, 491.]

The defendant's rule provided that "although the bank would endeavor to prevent fraud upon its depositors, yet all payments to persons presenting the pass books issued by the bank shall be valid payments to discharge the bank; in the case of lost books, the bank will decide as to the person to whom payment shall be made, without right of the depositors of such lost books to question the correctness of the payment." Also, "the pass book shall be a voucher of the depositor, and the possession of the pass book shall be sufficient authority to the bank to warrant any payment made and entered in it; and the bank shall not be liable or called on to make any payments without the presentation of the pass book at its counter, that the proper entering may be made in it."

It was the custom of the bank to require the signature of each depositor, at the opening of an account, in a book kept for that purpose. The book of the plaintiff, who had so signed, was stolen and was presented to the bank by a person who signed the plaintiff's name to the receipts for the amounts of the deposits, and received the same. In an action to recover the amount by the depositor, the assistant teller, who paid the money, testified that he compared the signature to the receipt with that of the plaintiff upon the book, and was satisfied that the former was genuine. The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the signatures were unlike, and the question was whether the failure to discover the discrepancy was negligence. A verdict was directed for the defendant.

It was held that, while the bank was not absolutely discharged by payment upon the production of the pass book, irrespective of the exercise of ordinary care in the examination of signatures, yet, to be evidence of negligence, the dissimilarity must be so marked and apparent that it can be readily discovered by the person competent to hold the position of teller; and the judgment was upheld for the defendant. These institutions are required to exercise reasonable care. 56 Maine 507; 27 Conn. 229; 46 N. H. 18. Appleby v. E. C. Savings Bank, 62 N. Y. 12.

Defendant's by-laws provided that "the bank will use its best efforts to prevent fraud; but all payments made to persons producing the pass book shall be good and valid payments."

"A draft may be made personally or by order in writing of the depositor (if the bank have the signature of the party to their signature book), or by letters of attorney duly authenticated, but no person shall have the right to demand any part of his or her principal or interest without producing his or her bank book that such may be entered therein."

The wife of the plaintiff obtained possession of the deposit book, which she presented with a forged check or order, and the same was paid to her. On the trial, defendant's own officers stated that there was a difference between the signature to the order and that in the signature book. The court declined to charge that the payment was valid, but left it to the jury to determine whether defendants used its best efforts to prevent fraud.

It was held that, as the appellate court had not the benefit, which the trial court did have, of the inspection of the signatures, it could not say but that said court, on inspection, discovered such a difference, as, with the other circumstances of the case, authorized a submission of the case to the jury; and that the exercise of ordinary care and diligence and good faith was not sufficient, as the contract of the bank to use its best efforts required more than ordinary care, and, in such case, the bank was not protected by the clause in the rules that a payment to one producing the deposit book should be deemed good and valid. If the payment had been made in reliance upon the order alone, and in the absence of agreement as to the pass book, the defendant could not have been excused as it would have been bound to know that the signature of its customer was forged. The National Park Bank v. Ninth National Bank, 46 N. Y. 77; Allen v. Williamsburgh Savings Bank, 69 id. 314, aff'g judg't for def't.

Distinguishing, Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Savings Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, and Hayden v. Brooklyn Savings Bank, 15 Abb. N. S. 297, where it was found by the referee, as a matter of fact, that the bank was not negligent, Appleby v. Erie Co. Savings Bank, 62 N. Y. 125.

See Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424.

The defendant delivered to "S." a depositor, a pass book which stated that the account was with her "in trust for Christopher Boone." After receiving one year's interest, "S." died and the defendant paid the amount of the deposit to her administrator. In the absence of any notice from the beneficiary the payment was good, as the deposit constituted "S." a trustee with title to the fund (distinguishing Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134), and upon her death her rights as trustee devolved upon her administrator (Banks v. Ex'rs of Wilks, 3 Sandf. 99; Bucklin v. Bucklin, 1 Abb. Court of App. 242; Bunn v. Vaughn, id. 253; Emerson v. Bleakley, 2 id. 22; Trecothlie v. Austin, 4 Mason, 16, 29), and the defendant had no right to inquire into the nature of the trust, and, until notice, owed no duty to the beneficiary. Boone v. Citizens' Savings Ins. &c., 84 N. Y. 83, rev'g 21 Hun, 235, and judg't for pl'ff.

Approving, Allen v. Williamsburgh Savings Bank, 69 N. Y. 311.

In 1869 a person deposited in a savings bank, $1,880 in the name of Henry Seaman of a certain address, and left his signature. One Harry Vail, living at the same place, was, in 1872, sent to prison, where he died, and under a stack of hay on his farm was found a deposit book issued by the bank to Henry Seaman, of like number and amount as of the one already stated. This book was delivered to Vail's administrators who demanded from the receiver of the bank payment of the dividend due on the deposit. Before such presentation, however, some person presented to the receiver's clerk, a deposit book apparently issued by the bank in the name of Henry Seaman, and demanded payment of the dividend, which was made to him, as the book contained the whole account, and was a precise duplicate of the book found under the hay stack. The person presenting it was questioned as to his age, occupation and residence, and answered the description given by the actual depositor. The signatures were compared and believed to resemble each other sufficiently.

The claim by the administrators was determined by the referee, who reported that the receiver had used reasonable and ordinary care and diligence on his previous payment of the dividend, and that the administrator was not entitled to the same. The appellate court held (1), that the burden rested upon the plaintiff to show that the deposit was made by Vail, and to establish title to the deposit book, and that the evidence failed to establish such conclusions; (2) that the evidence justified a finding that the duplicate pass book was issued, and that Seaman transferred one, or that it came to the hands of the person who drew the dividend, and the payment having been made with due care and diligence by the receiver to the one presenting the deposit book, he was entitled to protection; (3) that in case the deposit was made by Vail with a false description of occupation and age, and no duplicate book was issued, his administrator should not recover, as Vail by his action created confusion and doubt, which misled the receiver, and as the latter had acted in good faith. The People v. Third Avenue Savings Bank, 98 N. Y. 661.

The possession by a stranger of the pass book of a depositor of the savings bank constitutes no evidence of a right to draw money thereon, unless the bank show that there was a special contract with the depositor authorizing such a mode of payment. There was in such pass book the following rule, "All payments made by the bank upon presentation of the pass book, and duly entered therein, will be regarded as binding upon the depositor: money may also be drawn upon the written order of the depositor or his attorney, when accompanied by the pass book."

The by-laws contemplated but two modes of payment, one to the depositor personally, and the other upon his written orders, both requiring the presentation of the pass book as the condition thereof, and did not authorize the bank to make any payment to a stranger whose only evidence of authority was the possession of the pass book. Smith v. Brooklyn Savings Bank, 101 N. Y. 58; distinguishing Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Bank, 57 id. 418.

The pass book of a savings bank contained the rule, that payments should only be made to the depositor or his duly constituted attorney, on the presentation of the pass book, and that the bank would not be responsible "for any fraud committed on its officers in producing the pass book and drawing money without the knowledge and consent of the owner."

Money was drawn upon a forged check or receipt by a stranger, who had stolen the pass book. It was held that the pass book was not negotiable and its possession did not constitute proof of the right to draw money thereon; but imports liability of the bank to the depositor for the amount of moneys entered therein, as deposited, and an agreement to pay at such times and in such manner as the depositor shall direct.

The jury found upon evidence authorizing a submission of that question to them, that the defendant's officers were negligent in making the payment, and judgment thereon was upheld. The negligence seemed to consist, as to one item, in this: the cashier asked the person presenting the book where he lived, to which he first replied, "New York," and afterwards stated that he had lived in Brooklyn before that at 56 Tillary street, and the cashier asked him no further questions. Another payment was made by the clerk, who judged from the first that the signature to the receipt was not exactly right, and he asked the person presenting it if he could not write with a more fluent hand, and received the answer that he was not feeling well.

It appeared that, as to the first item, the cashier did not avail himself of the means at hand to identify the person presenting the pass book and forged receipt; but upon this evidence and the fact that the signature was before the jury for comparison, a submission of the question upon both items was held to be correct. Kummel v. G. S. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488; distinguishing Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Savings Bank, 57 id. 418.

The plaintiff, as administrator of "M." deceased, brought action to recover balance of the deposit with the defendant. The defendant proved that the balance had been paid to one "K." a person unknown to the defendant's officers, upon presentation of "M's" pass book, together with a paper purporting to be a power of attorney executed by plaintiff in his individual capacity, wherein he was described as executor of the will of "P," and which, although it gave a correct number of the pass book, by its terms authorized "K" to draw all moneys on deposit with defendant credited to the plaintiff as such executor. The pass book and power of attorney were obtained by fraud.

The trial court refused to submit the question as to whether the defendant acted with ordinary care and diligence in making such payment, to the jury. This was error, as the alleged power of attorney, upon its face, did not relate to the deposit in question, and conferred no power upon "K" to draw money, and this might furnish reasonable grounds for suspicion, and the question of defendant's negligence respecting the same should have been submitted to the jury.

The court laid down the rule that "if at the time (of payment) a fact or circumstance was brought to the knowledge of the defendant's officers which was calculated to have excited the suspicion and inquiry of an ordinarily careful person, it was clearly their duty to institute such inquiry, and their failure to do so presented a question for the consideration of the jury." Gearns v. Bowers Savings Bank, 135 N. Y. 557.

The defendant's rule, which was agreed to by the depositor, was, that "the officers and clerks will endeavor to prevent frauds on the depositors, but all payments made to any person presenting the proper deposit book shall be good and valid payments." Also, "on the decease of any depositor the amount standing to the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives."

A depositor died in Pennsylvania and an administrator was appointed and discharged. One Devlin got possession of the book and tried, unsuccessfully, to obtain the money thereon, and later began an action to recover the deposit. A referee was agreed upon to try the action: he had an office in the same building with the defendant's attorney. The plaintiff's attorney prepared the defendant's answer and the referee's report, and paid all expenses of obtaining a judgment, but taxed no costs against the defendant, and recovered judgment that the defendant pay the money to Devlin. In an action by the depositor's administratrix to recover the deposit, it was held that the judgment was collusive, and did not protect the bank from the second rule, and the question for the jury was of the defendant's negligence. The court seemed to have thought that the second rule applied only to the facts of the case, but that if this were not so the plaintiff should have been allowed to go to the jury on the question of the defendant's negligence, and the complaint should not have been dismissed. Farmer v. Manhattan Savings Institution, 60 Hun. 462.

The bank book of a savings bank provided, that the possession of the pass book should be sufficient authority to warrant any payment made and entered in it, and that the bank should not be liable, or called upon to make any payment, without the presentation of the pass book at its counter, etc., also, the following: "Although the bank will endeavor to prevent fraud on its depositors, yet the payments to persons presenting the pass book issued by the bank shall be valid payments to discharge the bank."

The plaintiff, having a deposit in the bank, upon the request of a stranger, gave him information, as to certain facts, which would enable the stranger to answer the test questions commonly put by a bank to a depositor, and thereafter the stranger, as James Wall, appeared at the bank with the pass book. The paying teller regarded the signature as slightly different from that in the signature book, put the test questions, and, as these were answered correctly, paid the money. In an action brought by Wall it was held, that the defendant was bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in making payments, and that the plaintiff, in furnishing the stranger with the information enabling him to answer the test questions was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover. Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, 64 Hun, 249.

A deposit in the name of "Ellen C. Maxwell, in trust for George T. Maxwell," is presumptively a trust fund and payment to the representatives of the cestui que trust out of the deposit, upon presentation of the pass book, discharges the bank from liability. Bishop v. Seamen's Bank for Sav., 33 App. Div. 181.

See Matter of Dohrman, 15 App. Div. 67.

A bank's by-laws, discharging it from liability upon payment to one producing the pass book, were held to apply only in the lifetime of depositor or upon his death without its knowledge, where they also provide for payment upon depositor's death to his legal representatives. Where the book was produced by another to whom the deposit was paid upon an affidavit purporting to show possession of the pass book as a gift causa mortis it must prove such title before it can be discharged. Podmore v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst., 48 App. Div. 218; s. c., 55 App. Div. 624.

Plaintiff permitted another to take her savings bank deposit book and failed to notify the bank, when he reported to her that it was lost. Payments were afterwards made by the bank on orders purporting to be signed by the depositor presented with the book. The bank was held not negligent. Winter v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 68 App. Div. 193.

A bank rule that payment to those producing the pass book shall discharge it of liability, does not relieve it of the duty of exercising reasonable care. Asking one presenting the pass book the usual questions asked of a depositor upon the original deposit without asking if he was the depositor, was not, as a matter of law, the exercise of such care. Abramowitz v. Citizen's Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 297.

It was not due diligence in a bank to pay out an entire deposit to one whom it knew was not the depositor, although he produced the pass book. And in view of such negligence, its rule that payment to one producing such pass book should relieve it of liability, was unavailing. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 29 Misc. 84; aff'g s. c., 19 Misc. 422; s. c., 17 Misc. 574; rev'g s. c., 17 id. 57.

Where an indorsement is forged, it is the bank's duty to discover it before the check is paid. A depositor is under no obligation to the bank to examine pass book for the purpose of discovering forgeries, and his right of action depending on a refusal by the bank to satisfy his demand, is not barred by the statute of limitations if, not discovering the forgery until seven years after the check was paid, he made no demand until that time. Bank of Brit. N. Am. v. Merchant's &c. Bank, 13 Weekly Dig. 374; s. c., aff'd, 91 N. Y. 106.

Notwithstanding the following regulations: That no person should have the right to demand any part of his principal or interest without producing the original book, and all payments made to persons producing the deposit book should be deemed good and valid payments to depositors respectively, the bank officers were not absolved from the exercise of ordinary care in making payments upon faith of the depositor's book. On the trial it devolves upon the plaintiff to show a failure of ordinary care. Israel v. Bowery &c. Bank, 9 Daly. 507. Schoenwald v. Met. Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418.

Unless bank has by its silence been induced to take any action or lost its rights, the depositor is under the necessity of proving fraud, error or mistake in the accounts. Frank v. Chem. Nat. Bank, 37 N. Y. Supr. Ct. 26; s. c., 45 id. 452; s. c., aff'd, 84 N. Y. 209.

A rule of a bank, that, on the death of a depositor, the money shall be paid to her legal representative did not justify its refusal to honor the demand of one to whom she had made a gift of the deposit during her life and who thereby was substituted as the depositor. Cosgriff v. Hudson City Sav. Inst., 24 Misc. 4.

A rule, that, in case of lost books, the bank would decide who was entitled to the deposit, did not justify its refusal to honor the demand of the executor of a depositor, where he was the only claimant and the book had been lost for several years. Mills v. The Albany Exch. Sav. Bank, 28 Misc. 251.

A bank did not use the requisite diligence, where a party presenting a pass book, though answering the usual questions satisfactorily and giving the usual identification by another, failed to make the depositor's "mark," where the doubt could have been settled by sending to the depositor a short distance from the bank. Rosen v. State Bank, 32 Misc. 231.

A rule of a bank, that payments to persons producing the pass book would relieve it of liability, did not protect a bank, where it knew that the party producing it was not the depositor. Ficken v. Emigrants' Industrial Sav. Bank, 33 Misc. 92.

Savings bank cannot avail itself of payment on forged order of depositor with pass book, as a defense under a by-law printed conspicuously on the pass book providing that "payment on deposits shall be made only to the depositor's order or to his legal representatives, on the presentation of the depositor's book." Eaves v. People's &c. Bank, 27 Conn. 229.

Pass book obtained of a bank by fraud is not of itself proof of negligence. Therefore, bank is not estopped from denying its liability to bona fide assignee of the book. McCaskey v. Conn. Savings Bank, 60 Conn. 300.

The diligence due to a special depositor is not measured by the fact that the bank was no more diligent in a like case with its own funds. Merchant's Nat. Bank v. Carhart, 95 Ga. 394; s. c., 32 L. R. A. 775.

Officers of a bank, using reasonable care and diligence, taking present means of identification, may pay money to one apparently in lawful possession of depositor's pass book, and not be accountable for loss incurred thereby. Sullivan v. Lewiston Ins. Co., 56 Me. 507.

Where a bank, under the impression that a depositor was dead, after he had been absent for more than seven years without being heard from, paid the deposit to one appointed administrator who had produced the deposit book, it was accountable to the depositor. Jochumsen v. Suffolk Savings Bank, 3 Allen, 87.

By-law stipulating that "presentment of a deposit book shall be a discharge to the corporation for the amount so paid," and requiring notice of loss of book, protects the bank when it pays, in the exercise of reasonable care and in good faith, on a forged order and production of book, although depositor was ignorant of the loss of it. Levy v. Franklin Savings Bank, 117 Mass. 448; Goldrick v. Bristol &c. Bank, 123 id. 320.

Where a depositor subscribed to by-laws by making his mark, and bank was ignorant of the fact that he could not read, it was not liable to his executor for money paid, without negligence, and without notice that the book had been stolen, to a stranger personating the depositor, notwithstanding the usual probate citation had been published by the executor. Donlan v. Provident Institution &c., 127 Mass. 183.

A bank was not warranted in requiring a bond of indemnity before paying a deposit upon the loss of a pass book where there had been a fire in the testator's house in which it might have been lost and the treasurer of the bank testifies no one since had demanded payment of the account. Hudson v. Roxbury Inst. for Sav., 176 Mass. 522.

A bank by-law, releasing it of liability, upon payment to anyone presenting the pass book, did not relieve the bank for payment upon a forgery of the depositor's name, where the by-law was not brought to his attention so as to become a part of his contract with it. Ackenhausen v. People's Sav. Bank, 110 Mich. 175.

It is not an exercise of ordinary fiduciary care for a bank to take a deposit of books from one, whom it knows to be not the owner, without the owner's consent, without an assignment, order or proof of delivery, and without sufficient evidence of pledgor's authority. Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1.

A bank by-law, that it is relieved of liability where depositor gave no notice of the loss of his book, is not effective where the bank fails to exercise ordinary care, as, by requiring identification, comparison of signatures, &c. Due diligence is not measured by the degree of care the bank exercises in regard to itself. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549.

A by-law that a bank shall be relieved of liability upon payment to parties producing the pass book, which is assented to by the depositor, is a valid contract limiting its liability where it has used due diligence. Cosgrove v. Provident Institution &c., 64 N. J. L. 653.

It is error, where it appeared that the custom in the case of a depositor who could not write, was to enter answers to questions asked him in the signature book, to refuse to instruct the jury that such action on the part of the bank was not negligence. Where a depositor cannot write and permits another to sign for him without informing the officials of the facts, he cannot recover for money paid to this other person. Fiore v. Ladd, 22 Ore. 202.

Depositor living at a distance will be presumed to have assented to by-laws contained in deposit book received by him, although he never left his signature at the bank; so, where depositor's brother, presenting the book, signed depositor's name, and the bank made payment, it was held not liable, notice of loss of book, as required by by-laws, not having been given. Gifford v. Rutland Savings Bank, 63 Vt. 108.

It is a question for the jury, whether bank was guilty of negligence, under circumstances calculated to arouse suspicion, such as dissimilarity in handwriting; the rule requiring a previous notice of thirty days for the withdrawing of a deposit is for the protection of the depositor as well as the benefit of the bank. Wegner v. Second &c. Bank, 76 Mo. 242.

I. Forged Bills.

It being the duty of the drawee to satisfy himself of the genuineness of the bill, before he accepts or pays; and it being important to the holder and other previous parties that he should do so, it is settled that he accepts or pays at his peril. If he accepts he is bound to pay, although the drawer's signature turn out to be forged; and if he pays he cannot recover back his money, unless the forgery is discovered and notice given immediately, or within such time as to give the holder the same advantage of proceeding against the party from whom he received the bill, as if it had been dishonored. Price v. Neale, 3 Burrow, 1354; Smith v. Chester, 1 T. R. 654; Smith v. Mercer, 6 Taunt. 76; Wilkinson v. Johnson, 3 Barn. & Cres. 428; Cocks v. Masterman, 9 id. 922. Where the plaintiffs intervened and paid the bill for the honor of the supposed drawers, without having seen it, it was held that they were not precluded by negligence from recovering the money back. It seems, that had the drawees paid the bill under the same circumstances they might have recovered the money. Goddard v. Merchants' Bank, 4 N. Y. 147, aff'g judg't for plff.

In an action against the indorser of a note, protested for non-payment, evidence of the forgery of the maker's signature was held to be immaterial. Lennon v. Grauer, 159 N. Y. 433; aff'g s. c., 2 App. Div. 513.

From opinion.—Defendant, "as indorser of the note, must be regarded, in effect, as having contracted with the plaintiff a subsequent holder, that the instrument was what it purported to be; that it and as well the preceding indorsements were genuine and that he had a clear legal title thereto. (Erwin v. Downs, 15 N. Y. 575; Turnbull v. Bowyer, 40 N. Y. 456; White v. Continental Nat. Bank, 64 N. Y. 316; Daniel on Negotiable Ins., sec. 1357). The plaintiff in taking this note for value and before maturity, was entitled to rely upon this contract, to be implied from Grauer's indorsement of the note, that the note was the genuine obligation of the person purporting to have made it. If it were the fact that the name of the maker was forged, it would not discharge the indorser. Coggill v. American Ex. Bank, 1 N. Y. 113."

Where a husband, knowing of forgery of checks by his wife, fails to make complaint to the bank, he cannot complain of future forgeries. Neal v. First Nat. Bank, 26 Ind. App. 503.

H. procured a loan representing himself as "D." The check for the money payable to D. was indorsed by H. as "D.," and again as H. As far as the bank was concerned H. was the intended payee, and it was not liable to the depositor. Meyer v. Indiana Nat. Bank, 27 Ind. App. 354.

One, whose name had been forged on a note, called at the bank that protested it in answer to a notice of protest, and, after examination of the note, told the cashier that it would be paid. But on the next day, in response to a demand for payment, he denounced the signature as a forgery. He was not necessarily negligent in failing at once to detect the forgery and notify the bank thereof, where he was in no way connected with the transaction. Trader's Nat. Bank v. Rogers, 167 Mass. 315.

Bank was not chargeable as upon a forgery, where the party was the one to whom the check was actually delivered in the belief that he was the payee. States v. First Nat. Bank, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 256.

Both at common law and under a statute providing that a forged signature to negotiable paper creates no rights against a party thereto, a bank was liable for the payment of a check to the order of A. delivered to one falsely representing himself to be A., and forging his indorsement. Tolman v. American Nat. Bank, 22 R. I. 462.

The holder of a forged draft is not negligent in cashing it for one introduced by a reputable person without further inquiry; the drawee pays it at its own risk. Moody v. First Nat. Bank, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 278.

A bank was not negligent in failing to detect a forgery on a renewal note by failing to compare it with the original. Lyndonville Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 68 Vt. 81.

II. Negligence in Executing.

When one having the opportunity and the power to ascertain with certainty the exact obligation he is assuming, chooses to rely upon the statements of the person with whom he is dealing and executes a negotiable instrument without reading or examination, as against a bona fide holder for value, he is bound by his act, and is estopped from claiming that he intended to sign an entirely different obligation, and that the statements upon which he relied were false, unless he can show that he was guilty of no laches or negligence in signing. Chapman v. Rose, 56 N. Y. 137.

Defendant entered into a contract with Miller to act as agent for the sale of a patent hay fork and pulley. A contract was filled out by Miller and signed by both; also an order, which was signed by defendant, for one of the hay forks and two of the pulleys, for which, by the order, defendant agreed to pay nine dollars. These were delivered to defendant. Another paper was then presented to defendant for his signature, which Miller represented to be but a duplicate of the order. Defendant, without reading or examining it, signed it and delivered it to Miller; the paper so signed was the note in suit. Plaintiff purchased in good faith before maturity, paying therefor $245. The trial court erred (1) in submitting negligence of plaintiff in purchasing note; (2) in refusing to submit question of defendant's negligence in signing the note. Chapman v. Rose, 56 N. Y. 137, rev'g, 44 How. Pr. 364, and judg't for pl'ff.

The action was upon an indorsement of a bill of exchange, and the evidence was that the defendant indorsed it believing it to be a guarantee—that being represented to him as its nature by a person in whom he put confidence. The judge charged the jury that if the defendant signed it not knowing it to be a bill, but believing it to be a guarantee, in consequence of a fraudulent representation as to its character, and if he was not guilty of any negligence or laches in signing it, he was not bound. The jury found for the defendant. Upon a review of the decision, and after a full and able discussion of the questions involved, the court held the direction at the trial to have been right; but a new trial was granted upon the ground that they were not satisfied with the finding of the jury on the question of fact. Foster v. McKinnon, L. R. (4 C. P.) 701. See the principle discussed and applied in Page v. Krakey, 137 N. Y. 307, "Contracts," post. 626.

In an action upon a negotiable promissory note, brought by a purchaser thereof before maturity, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, against the maker, the latter may prove as a defense, that when he signed it, it was represented to him, and he believed it to be a contract entirely different in character.

The case distinguished from that of a note fraudulently obtained, and which the maker intended to make. Whitney v. Snyder, 2 Lansing (N. Y.) 477, granting new trial on motion of defendant.

From opinion.—"This was an action against the defendant as maker of a promissory note. The plaintiff had testified that he purchased the note for value and before maturity. The defendant offered to prove in defense, that he was unable to read, and that when he signed the note it was represented to him, and he believed that it was a certain other contract, offered to be also produced in evidence, and which purported to be a contract inter partes of an entirely different character. The offer was overruled and the defendant excepted, and now moves for a new trial. We think learned judge at nisi prius erred in rejecting the evidence offered. The consent of the party alleged to have made it is essential to the binding force of a contract. This principle has been often applied to the case of deeds and other instruments misread, or the contents of which have been misrepresented to the party against whom the instrument is sought to be enforced. A bona fide holder of commercial paper for value and before maturity, is protected in many cases against defenses which are perfectly available as between the original parties, such as that the signature was obtained by false and fraudulent representations; that the paper has been diverted; that a blank bill or acceptance has been filled up for a greater amount than the party to whom it was delivered was authorized to insert, etc. But in all these cases the party intended to sign and put in circulation the instrument as a negotiable security; where this is the case he is bound to know that he is furnishing the means whereby third parties may be deceived, and innocently led to part with their property on the faith of his signature, and in ignorance of the true state of facts. But, while this is a rule of convenience and propriety, there are, and must be some limits to its application, some defenses as to which even a bona fide purchaser, purchases at his peril.

The familiar case of the note declared void by the statute, as in the case of usury, furnishes an illustration. During the period when, according to the statute law of this state, a bona fide holder for value, and before maturity, was protected against even the defense of usury, the statute against usury was practically almost abrogated as to negotiable paper. * * *

If, as to a party who can give evidence, that he purchased the bill for value, and before maturity, and as to whom the defendant is unable to bring home notice, the question of liability is reduced to a mere question of the genuineness of the signature, we do not see how a party would be able to escape liability, as suggested by the court in the case referred to, where he had written his name in lady's album, or for the purpose of franking a letter, or for any one of the thousand purposes for which a man is often called upon to furnish signature, without the intention of making a negotiable instrument. The true distinction was tersely stated by Bovill, Ch. J., in Foster v. McKinnon, interrupting counsel, arguendo, who was stating the proposition, that where the plaintiff proves he is a bona fide holder for value, it is immaterial that the signature of the defendant was obtained by fraud. 'That,' said the chief justice, 'is where the defendant intended to put his name to an instrument which was a bill.'

This action was brought by a bona fide purchaser of a promissory note, which the maker claimed to have signed under the belief that it was a contract to act as agent for a patent cultivator. Upon the trial evidence was given to prove that the note was signed by the defendant at his own house: that he and his two sons, who were present, could read; that defendant attempted to read the paper, but did not understand it well, and that it was then read over by the person presenting the paper, who was an entire stranger to the defendant and his family, and signed by the defendant. Held, that it was proper to submit the question of defendant's negligence to the jury, and that a motion to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was properly denied. (Learned, P. J. dissenting.) Fenton v. Robinson, 4 Hum. 252; denying motion for new trial by pl'ff.

Defendant entered into two agreements with two unknown persons one to act as agent for the sale of some cornshellers, and the other, that he might return all cornshellers not sold. Later another unknown person with the servant of the liveryman and employed to carry him to the defendant's house, came and represented that twenty cornshellers were at the depot, and asked defendant to receipt the same, which he did, and the receipt was in fact the note that came to the plaintiff as a bona fide holder.

Defendant, before signing, stated that he had fears that the receipt might turn out to be note, but was assured otherwise.

The defendant was a German and could not read English, and his nearest neighbor was a half mile away, but he consulted his wife, who could not read it. National Exchange Bank of Auburn v. Veneman, 43 Hun, 241, sustaining verdict for def't.

From opinion.—"It was not disputed upon the trial that the signature of the defendant to the note was procured by gross fraud and imposition, perpetrated by the person to whom he delivered it, and that the latter was acting in concert with the persons with whom the defendant had the first negotiations.

The jury was also justified in reaching the conclusion that when the defendant signed the note he believed it was a paper of a different character, and did not contain a promise to pay money to any one unconditionally. The defendant admitted that he intended to execute an instrument which would contain a promise on his part of some kind, and that the form of the same and the extent of his liability was to be ascertained and measured by the writing itself. The general rule of law applicable to the case is, that where a party is induced to sign a negotiable instrument by reason of fraud, artifice or deception practiced upon him by another, as to the nature of the instrument, and the maker signs the same innocently and under the belief that it is a contract of a different character, then there can be no recovery upon the bill or note, although the holder may be an innocent purchaser for value before maturity, unless the maker was guilty of laches or carelessness in omitting to read the same, or by some other means ascertaining the true nature and import of the instrument. If, however, the maker was guilty of laches or negligence in this respect, he will be liable to a bona fide holder for value, who purchased the note before maturity. Dan. on Neg. Inst. § 850; Chapman v. Rose, 56 N. Y. 137; Foster v. McKinnon, 38 Law Jour. (N. S.) 310; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Smith, 55 N. H. 593; Penn. R. R. Co. v. Shay, 82 Pa. 202; Big. on Bills and Notes, 583. * * *

We think a case was made for the consideration of the jury, and that the question of the defendant's negligence was properly submitted to them for their determination. As the maker could not read the English language he was obliged to rely upon the representations made by the other party, or consult and ascertain its contents from some third person. His wife, who was present, could give him no information, as she was unable to read the paper. It cannot be said, as we think, that it was negligence per se not to seek his neighbors and learn from them the contents of the writing. The subject matter of the negotiations was not of great importance, and the terms of the agreement assented to by the defendant were plain and could be readily and accurately expressed in writing by any person who could write and was accustomed to business. The nature and character of the paper intended to be executed must always be considered in determining the question of the defendant's negligence, so far as it is based on the omission to inquire of others for the purpose of ascertaining from them the contents of the writing. If a farmer, who could not read, should sell and deliver to a mill a load of grain and receive pay therefor, and should then be requested to sign a voucher in the miller's counting room, and should sign a paper prepared for that purpose, and it turned out to be a negotiable instrument, could it be said that the farmer was guilty of negligence, as matter of law, because he did not seek some third person for the purpose of ascertaining the import of the writing? The case supposed is not like the one before us in all respects, but it has been stated for the purpose of illustrating that the question of negligence is not always one of law and often becomes a question of fact for the consideration of the jury. * * *

The plaintiff cites us to our decision in the case of this Plaintiff v. Ogden, 31 Hun, 452, as an authority in support of his argument that the exception was well taken. In that case it was held that the defendant therein, the maker of a note, was guilty of negligence in omitting to consult the members of his own family, who could read and were present at the time of its execution.

In sustaining the ruling of the trial judge in submitting the question of negligence to the jury, we do not intend to depart from the rules of law stated in our opinion in that case."

Maker, ignorant of the language, was induced to sign a note without negligence on his part, under the belief that he was signing another instrument. Note was void, even in hands of an innocent purchaser. Hutkoff v. Moje, 20 Misc. 632.

Usury between maker and payee, and ignorance of its contents, did not invalidate a note as against an innocent purchaser where maker signed the note without reading it. Orr v. Sparkman, 120 Ala. 9.

It is not per se negligence for one who cannot read nor write to sign a memorandum about a certain agency, which is, in reality, a promissory note. Bedell v. Herring, 11 Cal. 512.

Defendant, who cannot read, is not liable on a promissory note made payable one day after date, which was represented to him as payable six months after date. Wenzel v. Shulz, 78 Cal. 221.

The presumption that the maker has read the note and knew its contents was rebutted, where he was, without negligence on his part, fraudulently induced to sign upon the representation that it was another kind of an instrument. Kingman v. Reinemer, 166 Ill. 208; aff'g s. c., 58 Ill. App. 173.

That maker's signature was procured fraudulently did not invalidate the note in the hands of a bona fide holder, where he was negligent in failing to use care to inform himself of its contents; especially where the note signed was no different in legal effect from the one he supposed he was signing. Exchange Nat. Bank v. Plate, 69 Ill. App. 489.

Defendant, a farmer, signed, what purported to be a contract constituting him agent for a pulverizing machine. He was not liable even to bona fide purchaser. Detwiler v. Bish, 44 Ind. 70; Gibbs v. Linaburg, 22 Mich. 419; Martin v. Smylee, 55 Mo. 571; Briggs v. Ewart, 51 id. 245; De Camp v. Hanna, 29 Oh. St. 467; Walker v. Ebert, 29 Wis. 194; Butler v. Carns, 37 id. 61; (case of illiterate man) Willard v. Nelson, 35 Neb. 651.

The maker of a promissory note was not allowed to defend a suit of a bona fide holder on the ground that he had signed it under the belief that it was a different contract, induced by the misrepresentations of the payee. Doughlass v. Matting, 29 Iowa, 498.

From opinion.—"It is better that the defendants and others who so carelessly add their names to papers, the contents of which are unknown to them, should suffer from the fraud their recklessness invites, than that the character of commercial paper should be impaired and the business of the country thus interfered with and unsettled."

At request of agent defendant signed his name to a blank piece of paper in order that his signature might be identified; and the instrument sued upon was printed over that signature. No liability. Caulkins v. Whistler, 29 Iowa, 495; Nance v. Lary, 5 Ala. 370; Baxendale v. Bennett, 3 Q. B. Div. 525.

The signature of an illiterate person was fraudulently procured to a mortgage note for one amount, where, without negligence on his part, he was induced to believe he was executing a lease and a note for another. Was not liable even to an innocent purchaser for value. Green v. Wilkie, 98 Iowa, 74.

Defendant did not intend to sign a note, but admitted signing a contract referring to the note in question, which constituted him agent for the sale of certain machines. He incurred no liability on the instrument as a note. Anderson v. Waller, 34 Mich. 113.

Where the evidence shows that defendant signed a paper thought by him to be a note for five dollars, but which, in reality, was a note for sixty dollars, it is error to instruct the jury that the recovery be for the full amount claimed. Closs v. Theifels, 79 Mich. 589.

Chapter 114, general laws, 1883, construed not to avoid maker's liability on a note on the ground of misrepresentation as to its nature and effect. Yellow Md. County Bank v. Tagley, 57 Minn. 391.

If defendant knew that he was signing a promissory note, and did not read it, but relied upon the assurance of the other party, he is liable to a bona fide purchaser. Ward v. Johnson, 51 Minn. 480; Cowgill v. Petifish, 51 Mo. App. 264; Cannon v. Lindsay, 85 Ala. 198; Trimble v. Thorson, 89 Iowa, 246; Bank v. Stanley, 46 Mo. App. 440.

It is not per se negligence for an aged and infirm man to fail to call in the assistance of some one to help him read a document he is about to sign. Bank v. Clark, 52 Mo. 593.

Fraud in procuring signature of a co-maker did not invalidate note in hands of innocent holder for value. Riley v. Reifert, (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. Rep. 185.

Defendant was sued on a note made to one, "or bearer," but in fact signed a note in which the words "or bearer" were crossed out, and recovery was not allowed. Kellogg v. Steiner, 29 Wis. 626.

A note for any amount other than that for which defendant signed is not defendant's note. Griffiths v. Kellogg, 39 Wis. 290.

The defendant, who was well advanced in years, signed his name on the back of what he thought, and was informed, was a guarantee, but which was, in reality, a bill of exchange for £3,000, and was sued as indorser of the same. The jury found that he was free from negligence, and the court held that he was not liable as indorser to an innocent holder for value. Foster v. MacKinnon, L. R. 4 C. P. 704.

III. Alteration.

Where the drawer of a bill or check, or maker of a note, leaves a blank, which has been filled up so as to give no evidence of alteration, he may be found guilty of such negligence, as will make him liable to a bona fide holder for the apparent amount of the indebtedness. The distinction between an instrument that the maker delivers as a completed instrument and one that is intentionally incomplete is important, but not conclusive.

In Bigelow on Estoppel it is said, that there has arisen a misconception of this doctrine from Younge v. Groat, 4 Bing. 253, where it was held that the drawer of a bill thus negligently leaving a blank should bear the loss of such filling up of the same as between him and the acceptor; but that the better authorities agree that no estoppel can exist upon any such facts to prevent the drawer or maker from alleging the alteration. See the cases cited in Bigelow on Estoppel, p. 494, notes 4 and 6, among which are Holmes v. Trumper, 22 Mich. 427; Greenfield Bank v. Stowell, 123 Mass. 196. But, see, Rainboldt v. Eddy, 34 Iowa, 440; McCramer v. Thomson, 21 Iowa, 249; McDonald v. Muscatine Bank, 27 Iowa, 319; Capital Bank v. Armstrong, 62 Mo. 59; Reddington v. Woods, 45 Cal. 406; Wirrell v. Gheen, 39 Pa. St. 388; Garrard v. Hadden, 67 id. 82.

(a). COMPLETED PAPER.

Where completed instruments were delivered and opportunity to alter the same was furnished by the manner in which they were drawn there have been some decisions, that seem to be exceptions to the general rule above stated respecting complete paper.

Where a blank space was left after the words "one hundred" so that the additional word "fifty" could be and was inserted thereafter, the maker was liable to a bona fide holder for value, upon the principle that if one, by his acts, or silence, or neglect, misleads another, or affects a transaction whereby an innocent party suffers, the blamable party must bear the loss. Garrard v. Hadden, 61 Pa. St. 82.

Where before the words "fifty pounds, two shillings" in a check, space was left which a clerk filled up with the word "three," and the banker having paid the whole amount of 350 pounds, 2 shillings, the clerk retained 300 pounds thereof, the loss fell upon the drawer. Younge v. Groat, 4 Bing. 253.

But, in Benedict v. Cowden, 49 N. Y. 396, the defendant was applied to to become agent for certain persons, and executed a note for a certain amount payable to the bearer one year from date. At the bottom of the note were these words, "the above note to be paid from the proceeds of machines, when sold." There not being room to sign after these words, the maker was advised to sign just above them, upon the assurance that it would be the same. This he did, and such words were thereafter cut off and the note then sold to the plaintiff for value and without notice. The question was held to be properly submitted to the jury, as to whether the words at the bottom of the note were designed by the parties as a part of the contract, and it was so held upon appeal that the cutting off of the same was a destructive alteration of the instrument. The question of the maker's negligence was not raised and did not enter into the decision.

Where the maker of a negotiable instrument puts it forth in such condition that an alteration can be made without defacing it or exciting the suspicions of a prudent man, the maker may be estopped from alleging the alteration, as a defense, as against a bona fide holder. Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, 371; Town of Solon v. Williamsburgh Savings Bank, 35 Hun. 414; Zimmerman v. Roat, 15 Pa. St. 191; Garrard v. Hadden, 61 Pa. St. 82; Statton v. Stone, (Colo. App.) 61 Pac. Rep. 181; Howie v. Lewis, 14 Pa. Sup. Ct. 232; First &c. Bank v. Webster, 121 Mich. 149.

But where a space, negligently left, was filled in such a manner as to be a palpable alteration, the maker was held not liable even to an innocent purchaser. Alexander v. Buckwalter, 8 Del. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 74; S. C., 17 Lane. L. Rev. 366.

See, also, Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46; S. C., 39 L. R. A. 697.

Where parties executing unsealed bonds certified, that they were issued under their hands and seals, and the seals were thereafter placed upon the bonds, and so came into the hands of innocent parties, the makers were liable. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Bender, 124 N. Y. 47; even when the certificate was made by agents of a municipality. Williamsburgh Savings Bank v. Town of Solon, 136 N. Y. 465, aff'g 65 Hun, 166, and judgment for plaintiff.

In Daniels on Negotiable Instruments, page 364, it is said: "The true principle applicable to such cases is, that the party who puts the paper in circulation invites the public to receive it of any one having it in possession with apparent title, and he is estopped to urge the actual defect in that which, through his act, ostensibly has none. The inspection of the paper itself furnishes the only criterion by which a stranger to whom it is offered can test its character, and when that inspection reveals nothing to arouse the suspicions of a prudent man, he will not be permitted to suffer when there has been an actual alteration."

While the drawer of a check may be liable where he draws the instrument in such an incomplete state as to facilitate or invite fraudulent alterations, he is not bound to so prepare the check that nobody else can successfully tamper with it. A depositor owes his bank the duty of reasonable care in verifying returned vouchers to detect forgeries and alterations and is liable to it for negligence in this regard. Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 171 N. Y. 219; modifying s. c., 60 App. Div. 241.

(b). UNCOMPLETED PAPER.

Unquestionably where the instrument has not been delivered as complete, but blank places have been purposely left, the maker will be liable, if his negligence has, in connection therewith, caused loss to an innocent party.

Where one makes and delivers his promissory note, perfect in form, except that a blank is left after the word "at" for the place of payment, it carries with it an implied authority for any bona fide holder to fill the blank, and the insertion of a place of payment and negotiation of the note contrary to agreement of the original parties does not avoid it in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, although the note be delivered not to be used or filled up in any way. Redlick v. Doll, 54 N. Y. 235, rev'g judg't for def'd't.

Where drafts were delivered to the drawee with directions to fill them for a certain sum, and they were filled up for a larger sum, the drawer was liable for such latter sum to a bona fide holder, and although the violation of the agreement of the parties was forgery, the acceptor was estopped from setting up the facts. Van Duzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y. 531.

In the following cases the question of improperly filling in uncompleted paper arose: Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y. 307; Chemung Canal Bank v. Bradner, 44 id. 680; Day v. Saunders, 3 Keyes, 347; Mitchell v.

Culver, 3 Cowen, 336; Boyd v. Brotherson, 10 Wend. 93; Michigan Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. 544; Angle v. N. Y. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 330; Weaver v. Lescure, 89 Ill. App. 628; Roberson v. Blevins, 57 Kan. 50; Weidman v. Symes, 120 Mich. 657.

One who signs or indorses a note in blank, to be used as a security, authorizes the person to whom it is delivered to fill the blanks in respects essential to the completeness of the note as such; but, in the absence of express authority or consent, no authority can be implied from the delivery, to insert a special agreement not so essential.

The date, the amount, the name of the payee, and place of payment may be inserted in their appropriate blanks. Page v. Morrell, 3 Keyes, 117; Van Duzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y. 531; Kitchen v. Place, 41 Barb. 465; Angle v. N. W. M. L. Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 339; but not rate of interest not allowed by law.

Where, therefore, in a note, which was indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, blanks were left for the date, the time the note was to run, the payee and the principal sum, held, that while the maker had authority to fill these blanks, the indorsement conferred no authority to write in the note an agreement that after maturity it should draw a special rate of interest, greater than the regular rate, although the law of the State where the note was made permits special arrangements to be made for the rate specified.

Also, held, when a note so filled in, was delivered by the maker in renewal of another note, and received by a collecting agent, authorized by the owner of the old note to renew it, that such authority did not justify the agent in the acceptance of the new and the surrender of the old note.

But held, that where the agent acted in perfect good faith, believing he was obeying instructions, and relying upon a supposed authority in the maker to fill in the note, although he assumed to be a professional expert in the business, he was not liable to his principal for damages unless the defect might have been discovered by the diligent exercise of that professional skill he was bound to possess and exert.

Such agent is responsible to his principal for the negligence of an attorney whom he employs. Weyerhauser v. Dewey, 100 N. Y. 150.

Where a note is executed and delivered to another with carelessly unfilled blanks, an innocent purchaser may properly regard the latter as the agent of the former to do the filling. Lescure v. Weaver, 99 Ill. App. 315.

The defendant had left with a clerk some signatures on blank pieces of paper, intended to be used as notes or indorsements, according to specific instructions. The clerk was by fraud to part with one of these blank signatures, and it was filled up as a note, leaving the signature to appear as that of a payee and indorser. The action was by a holder in good faith, who recovered. Putnam v. Sullivan, 3 Mass. 45.

From opinion.—"The counsel make a distinction between the cases where the indorser through fraudulent pretense has been induced to indorse the note he is called upon to pay, and when he never intended to indorse a note of that description, but a different note and for a different purpose. Perhaps there may be cases in which this distinction ought to prevail; as if a blind man had a note falsely and fraudulently read to him, and he indorsed it, supposing it to be the note read to him. But we are satisfied that an indorser cannot avail himself of this distinction, but in cases where he is not chargeable with any laches or neglect or misplaced confidence in others. Here, one of two innocent parties must suffer. * * * The loss has been occasioned by the misplaced confidence of the indorser in a clerk too young or too inexperienced to guard against the arts of the promissors." Upon these grounds the indorsers were held liable.

Part of contract was in form of a skeleton note, which was detached and the blanks filled out. Signers of the contract were held not negligent. Porter v. Hardy, 10 N. D. 551.

One who put it in the power of his agent to issue checks like ones he authorized a bank to cash, cannot complain, where the bank in good faith cashes such fraudulent checks. Armour v. Greene County State Bank, 112 Fed. Rep. 631.

IV. Negligence in Collecting.

A holder of a note, payable on demand, is not chargeable with negligence in not making such demand within any particular time. Parker v. Stroud, 98 N. Y. 379, reversing 31 Hun, 578.

Surety on a note is not discharged by negligence of payee to proceed against the principal debtor upon surety's request, when such debtor was, and continues, insolvent and the note was uncollectible. Thompson v. Hall, 45 Barb. 214; Frost v. Benedict, 21 id. 247.

If a surety requests the creditor to collect the debt from the principal, and the creditor neglects to do so, at the time when it is collectible, and, from a subsequent change of circumstances, it becomes uncollectible, the surety is exonerated from liability. Rensen v. Beekman, 25 N. Y. 552; King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. 384; Pain v. Packard, 13 id. 174.

Mere indulgence on the part of a creditor and neglect to prosecute principal, will not discharge surety. Fulton v. Matthews, 15 Johns. 433; Schroeppell v. Shaw, 3 N. Y. 446; Dorlon v. Christie, 39 Barb. 610; Thompson v. Hall, 45 id. 217. Field v. Cutler, 4 Lansing. 195, aff'g judgt for pl'ff, distinguishing Craig v. Parkis, 40 N. Y. 181. See Thompson v. Hall, 45 Barb. 214; Frost v. Benedict, 21 id. 247.

Surety was released when holder failed to sue his principal when solvent, as the surety requested. Kendall v. Milligan, 62 Ark. 629.

A statute providing that a demand note shall be considered dishonored after four months, held not extended by an act imposing the contract of indorsement on one who indorses a negotiable or non-negotiable note in blank, so as to make a delay of more than four months in presentment of a non-negotiable demand note a discharge of an indorser thereon. Oley v. Miller, 74 Conn. 304.

Holder of check on bank at a considerable distance did not deliver it to his own bank for three days after receiving it; drawee in meantime failed. Was negligent. Tomlin v. Thornton, 99 Ga. 585.

Holder, by carelessness, failed to perfect a default in a suit against maker and indorser for one or more terms. Accommodation indorser was not discharged by the extension of time. Hall v. Pratt, 103 Ga. 255.

Failure of holder to file claim against a solvent estate, which was sufficient to pay all claims, discharged surety. Wauhop v. Barlett, 165 Ill. 124; aff'g s. c., 61 Ill. App. 252.

Holder of a check on a local bank may present it at any time during banking hours on the day following delivery, though he knows the bank is likely to fail. Northwestern Iron Co. v. National Bank, 70 Ill. App. 245.

Failure to make the statutory presentment of a note for probate did not relieve surety, where estate was insolvent and nothing could be realized. Watts v. Bolin, 86 Ill. App. 474.

Notes indorsed after maturity must be presented within a reasonable time after maturity. Kimmel v. Well, 95 Ill. App. 15.

Where all the parties live in the same city the holder may have until the close of banking hours on the day following delivery of the checks for presentment and demand. Brown v. Schintz, 98 Ill. App. 452.

Obligation of a holder of a note payable at a particular place is discharged by presentment there. He is not bound to go beyond and make personal presentment to maker. Ewen v. Wilbor, 99 Ill. App. 132.

Holder of non-negotiable notes, who delayed for several years to proceed against maker, thereby released indorser. Matchett v. Anderson Foundry &c. Works, (Ind. App.) 64 N. E. Rep. 229.

Notice "to sue the note which I signed as surety, or I will not continue to be liable," was not a compliance with Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, section 1224; as it omitted the equivalent of "forthwith," and the surety was not discharged. McMillin v. Deardorff, 18 Ind. App. 428.

Failure to present, released the drawer of a check, where, though his account in the bank was overdrawn, he had a special deposit, which he had reason to believe the bank would pay it from. Hamlin v. Simpson, 105 Iowa, 125.

Mere indulgence to maker of note did not release surety. There must be a valid agreement definitely extending his time. Hall v. First Nat. Bank, 5 Kan. App. 493.

Negligence in attempting to collect an acceptance given as collateral did not release sureties, where it had been satisfied by check before its transfer as collateral. Turner v. New Farmer's Bank, (Ky.) 39 S. W. Rep. 425.

An assignee, as against the assignor, is not negligent in failing to test the genuineness of the signature of the note. Spalding v. Gates, (Ky.) 41 S. W. Rep. 440.

Nine days' delay in bringing suit on note after it fell due was held to be such negligence as would discharge the assignor; and his request for further indulgence did not relieve the liability. Riggs v. Covenant &c. Asso., (Ky.) 49 S. W. Rep. 190.

Mere forbearance of holder to sue payee did not discharge accommodation maker. Forstall v. Fussell, 59 La. Ann. 256.

Mere delay of two and a half years in foreclosing security did not discharge surety though it in the meantime depreciates. Gray v. Farmer's Nat. Bank, 81 Md. 631.

Eight months in making demand on a demand note was not unreasonable, where the note was intended to be of a more or less permanent character. Yates v. Goodwin, 96 Me. 90.

Mere delay or indulgence does not discharge surety. Must be an agreement to extend the time or vary the contract. Way v. Dunham, 166 Mass. 263.

Delay from whatever cause within the statutory period of limitation does not discharge maker though the note was for the indorser's accommodation. Agawam Nat. Bank v. Downing, 169 Mass. 297.

Demand must be made on a demand note, under a statute requiring demand within a reasonable time, within 60 days of its issue in the absence of evidence of custom and usage justifying delay. Merritt v. Jackson, (Mass.) 62 N. E. Rep. 987.

An instruction that drawee bank should not be made a collecting agent held correct. Carson &c. Co. v. Fincher, (Mich.) 89 N. W. Rep. 570.

Check, received on Friday deposited on Saturday, was held to be properly presented the following Monday morning. The drawee bank at the time of presentment was open and doing business though it closed during the afternoon. Haggerty v. Badwin, (Mich.) 91 N. W. Rep. 150.

Collecting bank held liable for failure to use reasonable care and diligence to protect the rights of its correspondent against the indorser and drawer by proper protest of the check delivered for collection. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank v. Security Bank, (Minn.) 91 N. W. Rep. 257.

Holder lost his rights against a surety under a statute requiring former, when notified to do so, to sue principal, where he brought suit in wrong county without attempting to ascertain the principal's residence. Coar v. Jeffries, 73 Mo. App. 412.

Drawer of a check was not discharged by negligence in its presentation unless injured thereby. Long Bros. v. Eckert, 73 Mo. App. 445.

Mere failure to apply depositor's deposit upon his note did not release surety. Citizens' Bank v. Booze, 75 Mo. App. 189.

Holder is not negligent in failing to collect collateral, where maker is insolvent and nothing could be realized. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Blackwelder, 81 Mo. App. 428.

Indorsee's failure to present check for 26 days was negligence, which subjected it to the equities of the drawer. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Dreyfus, 82 Mo. App. 399.

Suit was begun within 30 days after notice by surety to sue, as provided by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 8344, but at M., where summons was returnable one week later than at D. Was not negligence. Collum v. Luckinger, 83 Mo. App. 110.

Suit was begun two days after notice to sue, as provided by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 8344. The summons was made returnable more than 30 days from its date; but it was no longer than necessary to obtain service. Surety was not discharged. Surety appealed and ordered justice not to issue execution against principal; the fact that plaintiff failed to take out the execution against the principal was not negligence. Principal sold homestead in meanwhile. Failure to file transcript in Circuit Court did not injure surety as it would have created no lien on the homestead. Patton v. Cooper, 84 Mo. App. 427.

After the certification of a check, the holder held not chargeable with laches in presenting it. Muth v. St. Louis Trust Co., 88 Mo. App. 596.

Mere delay in collecting note did not discharge sureties. Hefferlin v. Krieger, 19 Mont. 123.

Indorsee, requested by surety to seize collateral and apply it on the note, failed to do so. Did not release surety. Myers v. Farmers' State Bank, 53 Neb. 824.

Where holder merely forbore to sue in the absence of request, or neglected to do so upon request, surety was not discharged. Bank of Maywood v. McAllister, 56 Neb. 188.

The drawer of a draft was permitted to recover its proceeds from a collecting bank to whom it had been sent for collection, and by whom it had been credited on an account between it and the forwarding bank which had become insolvent. Nash v. Second Nat. Bank, (N. J. L.) 51 Atl. Rep. 721.

Negligence in presenting check did not discharge drawer, where he had no funds in bank applicable to its payment. First Nat. Bank v. Linn &c. Bank, 30 Or. 296.

A check received after banking hours was deposited for collection the next day, and presented for payment the day following. There was no negligence. Loux v. Fox, 111 Pa. St. 68; Willis v. Finley, 173 id. 28.

Holder, having sufficient money on deposit to pay the note at maturity, failed to apply it thereon. Discharged indorser. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Marshall, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 621.

Holder's attachment was dissolved by reason of defect in affidavit. Indorser was not discharged where accident occurred through the mistake of former's attorney who was of reputed skill and good standing. City Sav. Bank v. Kensington Land Co., (Tenn.) 37 S. W. Rep. 1037.

Indorser is not injured by the negligence of the holder in failing to sue or protest, where maker was, at and after maturity, insolvent. Fontaine v. Bohn, (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. Rep. 637.

Assignor of an insurance policy was released under a statute, requiring assignee of non-negotiable instrument, in order to hold assignor as surety for debt, to use due diligence in collecting, where latter failed for two terms to commence an action. Gooch v. Parker, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 256.

A written notice to holder of a note, that the writer was not a principal, but signed as a surety, and requesting collection from other makers and a failure to sue within the statutory period, discharged the writer, though he was not injured thereby. Sullivan v. Dwyer, (Tex. Civ. App.) 42 S. W. Rep. 355.

Mere delay in suing after maturity did not discharge indorser as surety. Rice v. Farmer's &c. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App.) 42 S. W. Rep. 1023.

Holder must present the check or forward it for presentation on the day following its receipt. Deposit in a local bank for collection does not extend the time or permit the latter to forward it to a correspondent so remote that it will take longer than if sent direct. Gregg v. Beane, 69 Vt. 22.

Failure to duly present a claim against estate of principal guarantor did not release a surety on the guaranty. Donnerberg v. Oppenheimer, 15 Wash. 290.

Surety was not discharged by reason of bank's failure to apply, at debtor's direction, his deposit, which was insufficient to pay the note in full. Kirkland Land &c. Co. v. Jones, 18 Wash. 107.

Delay in suing principal at request of surety until third day of month following notice was not unreasonable. Rotting v. Cleman, 20 Wash. 116.

Surety was not released by mere continuance of suit by consent of creditor who was under an obligation to do so. First Nat. Bank v. Parsons, 45 W. Va. 688.

A check was mailed to payee at a place a short distance from his residence. He was not charged with its receipt so as to charge him with delay in sending it on for presentment, until it had reached him. Lloyd v. Osborne, 92 Wis. 93.

Payee of a check residing in the same place as the bank must present it within banking hours on the day after its reception, exclusive of Sunday or holidays. Grange v. Reigh, 93 Wis. 552.

Holder allowed statute of limitations to bar action upon the note. Did not discharge surety, who could have paid the note and sued the principal or, under a state statute, have compelled him to satisfy it. Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 69 Fed. Rep. 798.

A drawer of a check is only discharged to the extent that a failure to present it has injured him. Bowen v. Needles Nat. Bank, 87 Fed. Rep. 430.

A holder of a check may recover on it though he has been negligent in delaying to present it, where the holder has not been prejudiced thereby. Andrus v. Bradley, 102 Fed. Rep. 54.

V. Bona Fide Purchasers.

Gross negligence only is not a good defense to an action on a note; it may however be evidence of mala fides. Goodman v. Harvey, 4 A. & E. 870; May v. Chapman, 16 M. & N. 355; Jones v. Gordon, 2 App. Cases 616; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. (U. S.) 343; Pittsburgh Bank v. Neal, 22 id. 96; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110; Hotchkiss v. Nat. Bank, 21 Wall. 354; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 753; Brown Spoffard, 17 Alb. L. J. 31; Ex parte Estabrook, 2 Lowell 511; Schoen v. Houghton, 50 Cal. 528; Brush v. Scribner, 11 Conn. 395; Craft's Appeal, 42 id. 146; Bank v. McClelland, 9 Colo. 608; Matthews v. Poythress, 4 Ga. 287; Comstock v. Hannah, 76 Ill. 530; Shreeves v. Eppinger, 34 id. 29; Fink v. Chambers, 95 id. 598; Horton v. Bayne, 52 Mo. 531; Merrick v. Phillips, 58 id. 436; Hamilton v. Marks, 63 id. 167; Kit- tle v. De Lamater, 3 Neb. 325; Crosby v. Grant, 36 N. H. 273; Merriman v. Rockwood, 47 id. 81; Hamilton v. Vought, 34 N. J. L. 187;

Hall v. Wilson, 16 Barb. 548; Steinhart v. Boker, 34 id. 436; Lord v.
Wilkinson, 56 id. 593; Johnson v. Way, 27 Ohio St. 374; Phelan v.
Moss, 67 Pa. St. 59; State Bank v. McCoy, 69 id. 204; Moorehead v.
Gilmore, 17 id. 118; Greneaux v. Wheeler, 6 Tex. 515.

The title of a purchaser for value of stolen negotiable paper, including bonds payable to bearer, is not impaired by negligence. It will only be defeated by proof of fraud or bad faith. Notice of such facts, as would put a prudent man upon his guard, will not defeat his recovery thereon. Belmont v. Hoge, 35 N. Y. 67; Birdsall v. Russell, 29 id.
249; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. (U. S.) 365; Murray v. Lardner,
2 Wall. 121; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870.

Plaintiff made advances upon coupon bonds, which originally were accompanied by, or had attached to them, certificates stating in substance, that upon the surrender of the certificate and bond, the holder was entitled to full paid preferred stock. These certificates were referred to in the body of the bond. When the bonds were transferred to plaintiff the certificates were not with them. Held, that while the absence of the certificates might be a circumstance of some weight in determining the question, yet of itself, it did not prove fraud or bad faith. Welch v. Sage, 47 N. Y. 143, aff'g judg't for pl'ff. See, Birdsall v. Russell, 29 id. 220.

One who purchases negotiable paper before due for a valuable consideration, in good faith and without actual knowledge or notice of any defect of title, holds it by a title valid as against every other person.

Suspicion of a defect of title; knowledge of circumstances which would excite some suspicion in the mind of a prudent man; disregard of means of information, an examination of which would disclose such defect; in fine, gross negligence at the time of the purchase, will not alone defeat his title. It is evidence, but not conclusive, of bad faith, and that must be established by one seeking to impeach such title.

A dealer in United States bonds, payable to bearer, is not bound to make inquiry of one offering to sell, as to his right or title thereto, or to take any special precautionary measures to ascertain or protect the interests of others; and in case of the purchase by him of such bonds which have been stolen, the fact of an omission on his part to examine and regard notices of the theft at his place of business, will not, of itself without actual knowledge or notice, deprive him of the character of a bona fide purchaser. Seybel v. National Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, aff'g 2 Daly 383, and judg't for pl'ff; following, Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870, disproving Gill v. Cubitt, 3 Barnwall & Cresswell 466.

which was modified in Crook v. Jadis, 5 Barn. & Adol. 909. The rule of Goodman v. Harvey was followed in Uther v. Rich, 10 Adol. & Ell. 784; Arbouin v. Anderson, 1 Q. B. 498-504; Byles on Bills of Exchange, 119, is to the effect that, "It is now definitely settled that if a man takes, honestly, an instrument made or become payable to bearer, he has a good title to it, with whatever degree of negligence he may have acted, unless his gross negligence induced the jury to find fraud." Hall v. Wilson, 16 Barb. 546. See, Steinhart v. Boker, 34 id. 436; Magee v. Badger, 34 N. Y. 241; Belmont Branch Bk. v. Hoge, 35 id. 65; Galveston R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 478; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Peters 1; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 108; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110.

Where bonds, reciting on their face that they were not valid unless authenticated by trustees of mortgage securing them, were stolen, the defendant was not negligent in failing to notify the public of the theft, and although the plaintiffs bought for a good consideration and in good faith, they got no title. Maas v. M. H. & T. R. Co., 83 N. Y. 223.

See Germania Savings Bank v. Village of Suspension Bridge, 73 Hun. 590.

Gross carelessness alone cannot, as a matter of law, divest the title of a purchaser for the value of negotiable property, but may constitute evidence of bad faith. Canajoharie National Bank v. Diefendorf, 123 N. Y. 191; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870.

Plaintiff took note as collateral security for loan to the holder who was a note broker. It was held to be a bona fide purchase and that plaintiff was not chargeable with notice that the note had been diverted. American Exchange Nat. Bank v. New York Belting, &c. Co., 148 N. Y. 698; aff'g s. c., 74 Hun. 446.

From opinion.—"While it is true that the Potter-Lovell Company was engaged in business as a broker in commercial paper, we do not think that that circumstance was enough to raise a doubt as to its authority to deal with commercial paper in its possession, which third persons were bound to entertain. It was necessary, in order to deprive the paper of its negotiable attributes, that it should appear that the plaintiff knew, or had reason to believe, that the Potter-Lovell Company was acting as agent for the maker and not as an owner."

Plaintiff advanced money on a corporate note, duly executed by the president of the corporation, payable to a third party and by him indorsed to a firm of which the president was a member. It was held that this was a bona fide purchase and the plaintiff was not put upon inquiry. Cheever v. Pittsburgh &c. R. Co., 150 N. Y. 59; s. c., 34 L. R. A. 69; rev'g s. c., 72 Hun. 380.

From opinion.—"The mind, at the threshold of the inquiry, encounters two principles that point in opposite directions and lead to different conclusions, as the one or the other is allowed to preponderate in the mental process of determining the legal rights of the parties. On the one hand is the principle which protects a bona fide holder of commercial paper from existing antecedent equities between the parties, and on the other the principle which protects a corporation from the unauthorized and fraudulent acts of its own officers. There is not much difficulty in stating the rule of law defining the duties and obligations of a party to whom negotiable paper is presented for discount or sale before due. He is not bound at his peril to be on the alert for circumstances which might possibly excite the suspicion of wary vigilance; he does not owe to the party who puts the paper afloat the duty of active inquiry in order to avert the imputation of bad faith. The rights of the holder are to be determined by the simple test of honesty and good faith, and not by a speculative issue as to his diligence, or negligence. The holder's rights cannot be defeated without proof of actual notice of the defect in title or bad faith on his part evidenced by circumstances. Though he may have been negligent in taking the paper, and omitted precautions which a prudent man would have taken, nevertheless, unless he acted malu fide, his title according to settled doctrine, will prevail. (Magee v. Badger, 34 N. Y. 249; Am. Ex. Nat. Bank v. N. Y. Belting, & Co., 148 N. Y. 705; Knox v. Eden Musee Am. Co., 148 N. Y. 454; Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 123 N. Y. 202; Vosburgh v. Diefendorf, 119 N. Y. 357; Jarvis v. Manhattan Beach Co., 148 N. Y. 652.)"

* * * "The question now is, not what the facts were, but what they appeared to be, and what he had the right, from the notes themselves, to assume. He had the right to assume that the relations to the paper of every party whose name appeared on it were precisely what they appeared to be. (Hoge v. Lansing, 35 N. Y. 136)." * * * "The principle that applies in a case where an officer of a corporation makes the corporate obligation payable to himself, and then attempts to deal with it for his own benefit, does not aid in solving the question in this case. Where paper of that character is presented by the officer or agent of the corporation, it bears upon its face sufficient notice of the incapacity of the officer or agent to issue it. (Hanover Bank v. Am. Dock & T. Co., 148 N. Y. 612; Bank of N. Y. & C. v. Am. Dock & T. Co., 143 N. Y. 559; Wilson v. M. E. R. Co., 120 N. Y. 145; Gerona v. McCormick, 130 N. Y. 261). There are numerous cases that belong to that class cited by the learned counsel for the defendant on his brief. There is a manifest distinction between them and the case at bar. Here the officer was not dealing with the corporate notes payable to himself, but with notes that had been regularly issued, so far as appeared from their face, to a stranger and by him transferred to a firm of which the officer was a member and for which he acted as agent in procuring the loan from Brooks and pledging them as security. * * * None of the cases cited by the learned counsel for the defendant sustain the proposition that such a circumstance is sufficient to put the purchaser of negotiable paper upon inquiry or charge him with knowledge of the fact in case he fails to make it, and there are many cases that tend to support the contrary view. (Am. Ex. Nat. Bank v. N. Y. B. & P. Co., 148 N. Y. 698; Miller v. Consolidation Bank, 48 Pa. St. 514; Walker v. Kee, 14 S. C. 142.)"

A bank discounted for a customer a note running "we promise to pay," etc., and signed by parties in their individual names with the addition of the words "President," "Secretary." It was held that the bank was not obliged to inquire whether the note was intended as an individual or a corporate obligation and could sue the signers as a bona fide purchaser. First Nat. Bank v. Wallis, 150 N. Y. 455; aff'g s. c., 80 Hun, 435.

From opinion.—"It appears that the bank discounted the note on the credit primarily of its customers, the payees, making no inquiry as to whether it was a corporate or individual obligation, and having no knowledge on the subject. In law it was the individual note of the defendants (Caseo National Bank v. Clark, 139 N. Y. 308; Merchant's Nat. Bank v. Clark, id. 315), and the form of the promise is quite consistent with an intention to create an individual liability."

Plaintiff, having taken, for value, from the payee a note made to him by his firm and indorsed by him and then by another firm, sued the latter as second indorsers. It was held that he was charged with knowledge that the firm indorsement was for accommodation and was bound to inquire into its validity. Smith v. Weston, 159 N. Y. 194; aff'g s. c., 88 Hun, 25.

See, also, Bank of Monongahela Valley v. Weston, 159 N. Y. 201; rev'g s. c., 12 App. Div. 624; First Nat. Bank v. Weston, 25 App. Div. 414; s. c., 49 N. Y. Supp. 542.

From opinion.—"While upon the production of the note by the plaintiff and proof of the signatures of the parties thereto and of presentment and notice of dishonor, a prima facie case was established in his favor, as soon as it appeared that the note was indorsed outside of the firm business and without the authority of all the members, the burden of proof shifted, and in order to recover it was necessary for the plaintiff to show that he was a bona fide purchaser, or that the indorsement was authorized. (Joy v. Diefendorf, 130 N. Y. 6; Canajoharie Nat. Bank v. Diefendorf, 123 N. Y. 191; Nickerson v. Ruger, 76 N. Y. 279; First Nat. Bank v. Green, 43 N. Y. 298). It was not enough for him to prove simply that he paid value for the note before maturity, but it was necessary for him to go farther and show either that he had no knowledge or notice equivalent to knowledge that the indorsement was for the accommodation of the makers, or else that it was made with the authority of or was ratified by the other members of the firm. (Vosburgh v. Diefendorf, 119 N. Y. 357; Bank of Rochester v. Bowen, 7 Wend. 159; Dob v. Halsey, 16 Johns. 34; Lavery v. Burr, 1 Wend. 529.) As the note was transferred to the plaintiff by one of the makers, who was also the payee and first indorser, the presumption arose that the second indorsement was made for the accommodation of some prior party to the note and threw the burden on the holder of showing that it was authorized. (National Park Bank v. German-American & Co., 116 N. Y. 281). The plaintiff knew he was dealing with one of the makers of the note when he took it from James K. Van Campen, and he knew also that Mr. Van Campen, either as maker or as first indorser, could not be expected to have possession of the note if it had passed through the firm of Weston Brothers in the ordinary course of business. He was, therefore, put upon inquiry, which, if made in the proper quarters, would, as it must be presumed, have disclosed the fact that the second indorsement was made without authority. (Foot v. Sabin, 19 Johns. 154; Wilson v. Metropolitan El. Ry. Co., 120 N. Y. 145; Stall v. Catskill Bank, 18 Wend. 466; Gansevoort v. Williams, 14 Wend. 134; Joice v. Williams, id.; Wilson v. Williams, id. 146)."

But when the note is not presented by one prior in order of liability or possession to the indorser the rule does not apply and the purchaser is not chargeable with notice that the indorsement is not in the ordinary course of business and need not inquire into its validity. Bank of Monongahela Valley v. Weston, 159 N. Y. 201; rev'g s. c., 12 App. Div. 624.

Plaintiff discounted a note, made in the firm name by a member of the firm, of which defendant was also a member, for accommodation of the payee, presented and indorsed by him as first indorser and by a third party, another partnership, as second indorser. It was held that, as to defendant, the paper was on its face regular and in the holder's hands in the due course of business and plaintiff was not put upon inquiry. Second National Bank v. Weston, 161 N. Y. 520; rev'g s. c., 31 App. Div. 403.

From opinion.—"There is one feature, however, which distinguishes this case from the others against these defendants, that have been before us. (Smith v. Weston, 159 N. Y. 194; Monongahela Valley Bank v. Weston, 159 N. Y. 201). The notes formerly under consideration were presented to the purchaser, either by the maker or by a party who would not, in the ordinary course of business, have them in his possession unless they were accommodation paper. This fact, after evidence was given tending to show that the notes had been signed by William in the name of the firm without the consent of the other members, was held to involve such notice to the purchaser as to cast upon him the burden of showing that he was a bona fide purchaser, or that the use of the firm name by the one partner was authorized by his co-partners. In the case now before us, the note was presented to the plaintiff by the payee, to whom it had apparently been delivered by the Weston Brothers, as makers, in the usual course of business, and hence upon the face of the transaction, there was nothing to put the purchaser upon inquiry. The plaintiff had a right to assume, in the absence of actual notice of any defect, that the relation to the paper of every party whose name had been written upon it was precisely what it appeared to be. (Cheever v. Pittsburgh &c. Co., 150 N. Y. 59). While the plaintiff may have had notice that the subsequent indorsers, who do not defend, had indorsed for the accommodation of some other party to the note, the presentation of the note by the payee cast no suspicion upon the capacity in which the Weston Brothers had signed it. As to them, it was apparently business paper, and there was nothing for the plaintiff to inquire about in that regard."

A note recited that it was given in purchase of land and stipulated for a lien thereon. Purchaser was put upon inquiry as to the consideration of the note having been paid. Scott v. Scott, 2 App. Div. 240.

Note of a firm payable to a member, indorsed by another firm and purchased from payee was notice that the indorsement was for accommodation and consequently not in the regular course of business. First Nat. Bank v. Weston, 25 App. Div. 414.

Signature "as trustee" put a purchaser upon inquiry as to the trustee's right to use the trust funds is in his personal affairs; and an inquiry of the trustee only after the funds had been diverted did not discharge the duty to investigate. Marshall v. De Cordova, 26 App. Div. 615.

Parties dealing with firms are put upon inquiry as to the firm name. Signature "Iba & Green" to a note when the firm name was "Empire Garden." put the purchase upon inquiry as to the reason therefor. Lucker v. Iba, 54 App. Div. 566.

Knowledge of the accommodation character of a note did not charge an innocent purchaser with notice of a fraudulent diversion of the proceeds. Beall v. General Electric Co., 16 Misc. 611.

On proof of diversion, the burden is on the holder to show that he was without notice. McCammon v. Shantz, 26 Misc. 476.

See, also, McCammon v. Shantz, 49 App. Div. 460.

The purchaser of a firm note, stated to have been taken for bicycles went to the maker's store, saw no bicycles but saw that his firm was in the transportation business and made no inquiries. It did not charge him with knowledge that the note was outside the partnership business. Union Nut & Bolt Co. v. Doherty, 32 Misc. Rep. 241; s. c. aff'd. id. 496.

The taker of a check several days past due with the letters "N. G." marked thereon, by a bank which had dishonored it, held not a bona fide purchaser. Spero v. Holoschutz, 36 Misc. 764.

Knowledge that one in possession of a note is a maker and that it is to be negotiated for his benefit is sufficient to notify a purchaser that the other makers signed for accommodation. Evans v. Speer & Co., 65 Ark. 204.

A note payable to a firm or bearer in the hands of a partner did not charge a purchaser with knowledge of the rights of the partnership. Possession of such a note is prima facie evidence of ownership. Bank of Paris v. Pearson, 66 Ark. 310.

Note in payment of a patent right, which does not so state upon its face as required by statute, held void in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Wyatt v. Wallace, 67 Ark. 575.

Knowledge that notes were given by stockholders for subscriptions to stock, in consideration of a promise to issue stock upon their payment, is not so out of the usual course as to charge holders with notice that the stock was not delivered. Kinkel v. Harper, 7 Colo. App. 45.

A letter of authority to agent to draw provided he is still in a certain place and "needs the money yet" was held to notify one cashing a draft drawn in pursuance thereof that the authority must be exercised within a reasonable time. Seventeen days held not unreasonable. Posey v. Denver Nat. Bank, 24 Colo. App. 199; aff'g s. c., 7 Colo. App. 108.

Fact that the same person is the president of both the maker and the payee does not necessarily put one on inquiry. St. Joe &c. Min. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 10 Colo. App. 339.

Indorsement "without recourse" does not put one upon inquiry. Beach v. Bennett, (Colo. App.) 66 Pac. Rep. 567.

Letter to maker from payee of note with coupons secured by trust deed, in response to a remittance of interest, stating that he would send coupon as soon as received from holder, charged maker with notice that payee was not the owner and not entitled to interest. Campbell v. Equitable Securities Co., (Colo. App.) 68 Pac. Rep. 788.

Knowledge that the consideration for the note was an agreement, which, by reason of the payee's insolvency, could not be carried out, was knowledge of a failure of consideration for the note. Russ Lumber &c. Co. v. Muscupiabe Land &c. Co., 120 Cal. 521.

A note executed for the accommodation of a bank made payable to its cashier, and by him indorsed in blank, was negotiated by the president for his own benefit. Knowledge that he was president of the bank was not notice that his act was unauthorized. Kaiser v. United States Nat. Bank, 99 Ga. 258.

Knowledge of the consideration of a note expressed on its face was not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice of the failure thereof. Post v. Abbyville &c. R. Co., 99 Ga. 232.

Knowledge of the possession of a note by a firm of which one of the makers was a member did not charge a purchaser with notice of payment. Haug v. Riley, 101 Ga. 372; s. c., 40 L. R. A. 244.

Joint execution by a husband and wife did not give notice that the latter was surety for the former. Southern &c. Assn. v. Perry, 103 Ga. 800.

Knowledge that a guaranty was the consideration for a note did not charge a purchaser with notice that the payee might or did fail to fulfil his guaranty. Hudson v. Best, 104 Ga. 131.

The taker of a non-negotiable note is chargeable with notice of lack of consideration. Ryals v. Johnson County Sav. Bank, 106 Ga. 525.

A note stating that it was given for patent right was not void for failure to bear evidence of its character on its face, though it failed to designate the patent or state the amount of the consideration as required by statute. Smith v. Wood, 111 Ga. 221.

Knowledge that promoters had sold property to a corporation for more than they paid for it did not charge holders of corporate notes with knowledge that they had fraudulently represented to its stockholders that the company was getting it at cost. Cranston v. Bank of State of Georgia, 112 Ga. 617.

That notes were stated in an indorsement to be secured by an interest in horses described in a certain agreement did not charge a purchaser with knowledge of the contents thereof. Biegler v. Merchant Co., 164 Ill. 197; aff'g s. c., 62 Ill. App. 560.

Indorsement on a note and trust deed that certain property was "released by order of Joseph Brugger, holder of note secured by this trust deed" made purchaser negligent in making no inquiry except of the trustee himself. Chicago Title &c. Co. v. Brugger, 196 Ill. 96; aff'g s. c., 95 Ill. App. 405.

That a purchaser of a draft was suspicious, did not charge it with knowledge of defective title. Lampson v. Illinois Trust &c. Bank, 62 Ill. App. 371; Weaver v. Leseure, 89 id. 628.

The fact that notes were in the hands of one from whom they were taken when first seen and that he promised to get them indorsed, gave notice that an indorsement was for accommodation, and, being that of a corporation, imposed the duty of inquiry. Pick v. Ellinger, 66 Ill. App. 570.

A statement by a father, that his wife objected to his signing notes for his son, coupled with knowledge that the money went to the son, charged a purchaser with notice that the father signed only as surety for the son. Peterson v. Stege, 67 Ill. App. 147.

A purchaser of a note took it without any actual knowledge of defenses, though he failed to make inquiry under circumstances which would have raised a suspicion in the mind of an ordinary person. Held, that he could recover as a bona fide purchaser. Gray v. Goode, 72 Ill. App. 504.

Provided, he was not guilty of bad faith. Kent v. Barnes, 72 Ill. App. 617.

Knowledge that a holder was an agent was sufficient to impose duty of inquiry as to the extent of his authority. Schneider v. Lebanon Dairy &c. Co., 73 Ill. App. 612.

A purchaser of a note was not charged with knowledge of notices published in newspapers. Gehbach v. Carlinville Nat. Bank, 83 Ill. App. 129.

That note bore on its face evidence of connection with a trust was sufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry as to the trustee's right to dispose of it. Lang v. Metzger, 86 Ill. App. 117.

To defeat title of bona fide holder he must be chargeable with bad faith. Suspicion or knowledge of facts which would make it negligence not to inquire is insufficient. Metcalf v. Draper, 98 Ill. App. 399.

The maker of a note and his sons, who had been charged with murder and arrested were released through the efforts of an attorney. Knowledge of the facts gave notice of the unreasonableness of the fee for which the note was given. Shirk v. Neible, 156 Ind. 66.

A purchaser of a note is not put upon inquiry as to its consideration where no suspicious facts appear upon its face. Pape v. Hartwig, 23 Ind. App. 333; National Exch. Bank v. Berry, 21 Ind. App. 261.

Mere suspicion or carelessness was not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice, but only such gross negligence or willful neglect as will amount to bad faith. Lehman v. Press, 106 Iowa, 389.

A purchaser of a note was not charged with notice where he made some inquiry though he was negligent in not going far enough. Central State Bank v. Spurlin, 111 Iowa, 187; s. c., 49 L. R. A. 661.

The statement in a note that it was executed for the purchase money in lots in which a lien was retained as security was not sufficient to put a purchaser upon notice as to any fraud connected therewith. McCarty v. Louisville &c. Co., 100 Ky. 4.

Payee took a renewal of a note in smaller notes for the same amount with sureties. The character of the transaction was not sufficient to charge him with notice of the maker's intention to defraud or mislead the sureties. Sebree Deposit Bank v. Clark, (Ky.) 48 S. W. Rep. 1089.

Indorsement of notes "for collection" gives notice of lack of authority to dispose of them to the extent of the indorser's interest therein. Gaskill v. Hufferaker, (Ky.) 49 S. W. Rep. 170.

A cashier of a bank discounting notes of a corporation was also a stockholder of the latter. Not being an officer he was not chargeable with notice of fraud on the part of the corporation in obtaining the notes. World Man. Co. v. Hamilton-Kenwood Cycle Co., 123 Mich. 620.

Purchase after protest did not charge one with notice of illegality as to consideration: even though taken under suspicious circumstances. Wing v. Ford, 89 Me. 140.

Knowledge that an indorsement is for accommodation will not charge a purchaser with notice that it is for any other purpose than for credit. Tourtlot v. Reed, 62 Minn. 384.

Purchase after maturity binds a purchaser as to facts which the circumstances reasonably put him on inquiry as to. Fuller v. Quesnel, 63 Minn. 302.

Knowledge that payee ran a "bucketshop," that the first indorser was interested therein and that the maker had dealings with the concern in "futures" was sufficient to suggest inquiry: and the purchaser was chargeable with knowledge that the note was given for a gambling debt, which inquiry would have revealed. Merchant's Nat. Bank v. Sullivan, 63 Minn. 468.

A purchaser will not be charged with knowledge of facts which inquiry would have revealed, unless the circumstances were so patent as to make a lack of inquiry a matter of bad faith. Gale v. Birmingham, 64 Minn. 555; Collins v. McDowell, 65 Minn. 110.

The words "as advised" on a draft do not import notice that there are no funds in the hands of drawee, where the purchasers knew that in previous transactions such drafts were promptly honored. American &c. Bank v. Gluck, 68 Minn. 129.

Pendency of proceedings to test the validity of a note are not notice to a purchaser before maturity. Fulton v. Andrea, 70 Minn. 445.

Delivery of check by mistake to wrong party did not prevent recovery by an innocent purchaser thereof. Barrows v. Western &c. Teleg. Co., (Minn.) 90 N. W. Rep. 1111.

Suspicion which does not amount to bad faith will not charge a purchaser with knowledge of defects which an inquiry would have revealed. Borgess Invest. Co. v. Vette, 142 Mo. 560; Schroeder v. Seittz, 68 Mo. App. 233; Brown v. Hoffelmeyer, 74 Mo. App. 385.

Notice that a note is payable to a trustee, binds a purchaser to an inquiry as to the extent of his authority to deal with it. Galloway v. Gleason, 61 Mo. App. 21.

Lack of "credits" on an installment note for payments past due does not exclude the holder from the rights of a bona fide purchaser. McCorkle v. Miller, 64 Mo. App. 153.

Holder of past due paper is not bound to look behind the appearances of the paper, arising from transactions independent of the note against his assignor, for latent equities. Mohr v. Byrne, 135 Cal. 87; Crawford v. Johnson, 87 Mo. App. 418.

Purchase of a check under suspicious circumstances, that could have been cleared by mere asking a question, and were incompatible with ordinary business prudence or common honesty, does not entitle one to protection of a bona fide purchaser. Harrington v. Butte &c. Min. Co., 19 Mont. 411; s. c., 36 L. R. A. 539.

Purchaser took a joint note from one of the makers as collateral for his individual note. He was not chargeable with knowledge of diversion of the proceeds. American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Ulm, 21 Mont. 440.

A purchaser after maturity whose vendor was an innocent purchaser without notice succeeds to his rights. Jones v. Wiesen, 50 Neb. 243.

That an officer of a corporation issued a note by it to himself as payee, put a purchaser upon inquiry as to his authority therefor. Stough v. Ponca Mill Co., 54 Neb. 500.

A bona fide purchaser is not charged except with actual notice. Knowledge of circumstance such as would put an ordinary man upon inquiry is insufficient. First Nat. Bank v. Pennington, 57 Neb. 404.

The words "This note is secured by a contract on land * * * described as," was not sufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry. Knight v. Finney, 59 Neb. 274.

Duty of inquiry on the part of a purchaser depends on law of the place where the contract is to be performed and not upon the law of the forum, and where the place of performance is Vermont, the question must go to the jury upon evidence showing knowledge of facts sufficient to put a reasonable man on inquiry. Limerick Nat. Bank v. Howard, (N. H.) 51 Atl. Rep. 641.

Note was signed and left with payee's agent for delivery on condition of procuring signature of others. The conditions were not fulfilled and payee put it in circulation. Held no defense against an indorsee in due course. Porter v. Andrus, 10 N. D. 558.

The inscription "No. of Note 2821. No. of Policy 654,911" gives notice to an agent that it is a premium note and belongs to company. Bresce v. Crumpton, 121 N. C. 122.

Knowledge of the consideration for note does not put a purchaser upon inquiry to ascertain whether it has failed or not. United States Nat. Bank v. Floss, 38 Or. 68.

A purchaser of a check is not put upon inquiry as to its consideration simply by reason of its being dated ahead. Rogers v. Duan, 172 Pa. St. 151.

The signature "The Crowell and Class Cold-Storage Co., by Chas. N. Newell, Treas.," did not put a purchaser upon inquiry as to whether the firm had become a corporation. New York Nat. Exch. Bank v. Crowell, 171 Pa. St. 313.

The indorsement of the firm name to a partner's note, in his handwriting and discounted for his benefit was notice to the bank of the possibility of its being unauthorized. Brown v. Pettit, 178 Pa. St. 17; s. c., 34 L. R. A. 723.

Neglect to investigate suspicious circumstances will not charge a holder with notice unless they amount to bad faith upon his part. Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Garber, 178 Pa. St. 91.

Plaintiffs before purchasing, asked the makers if the notes were all right and were told that he believed they were, that they had been given to answer for a specific object and would be paid when due. Plaintiffs were not charged with notice of the other person's failure to perform that specific object. Snyder v. Hancock, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 159.

Knowledge that a note was given for a patent right charged the taker with notice of a failure of consideration, though the statement was omitted from the face of the note. Troxell v. Malin, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 483.

Purchaser of draft is bound to look at the terms of acceptance only. Reverenswood Bank v. Rencker, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 192.

Evidence of fraud or duress in procuring a note throws upon subsequent holder burden of proving himself a bona fide holder for value. Kirby v. Berquin, (S. D.) 90 N. W. Rep. 856.

Bank accustomed to discount paper at from 12 to 25 per cent was not put upon inquiry by purchasing notes at 20 per cent discount from a stranger, where he knew the maker to be solvent. Oppenheimer v. Farmer's &c. Bank, 97 Tenn. 19. See 33 L. R. A. 767.

A manufacturer of furnaces sold them to a manufacturer of an attachment, taking notes directly to them upon the resale of both by the latter. Was not chargeable with representations made by the latter. Blue Springs Min. Co. v. McIlvren, 97 Tenn. 225.

Inquiry would have revealed that the word "trustee" was only descriptive; failure to make it did not charge the holder with notice of equities of the maker. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Looney, 99 Tenn. 278; s. c., 38 L. R. A. 837.

Mere knowledge of the consideration and that it might fail, did not put a purchaser upon inquiry to ascertain whether or not it had failed. Merchant's &c. Bank v. Pennland, 101 Tenn. 445.

A purchaser of a note relying on a letter, for the authority of an agent, was chargeable with knowledge as to ownership also contained therein. Bristol Bank &c. Co. v. Jonesboro &c. Co., 101 Tenn. 545.

A purchaser of a draft in settlement of insurance was chargeable with notice of fraudulent overinsurance, where he had both policies in his possession. Teutonia Ins. Co. v. Russell, (Tenn.) 48 S. W. Rep. 703.

Taking a note payable to a certain person or bearer directly from one of the makers was sufficient to charge the purchaser with notice of equities in favor of sureties. Battle v. Cushman, (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. Rep. 1037.

A manufacturer having made arrangements with another for selling its machinery, whereby it had the right to see that notes turned over to it therefore had proper security, was not a purchaser without notice of such notes especially where it was notified of the terms of the contract of sale. Hutches v. Case Threshing Machine Co., (Tex.) 35 S. W. Rep. 60.

The position of an indorsement of holder above the blank indorsement of a corporation to whom it had been indorsed specially was not notice of the latter's being an accommodation indorsement. Marshall Nat. Bank v. O'Neal, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 640.

Mere knowledge of fact suggesting inquiry will not charge a purchaser with what inquiry would have revealed, where there is no bad faith. Hynes v. Winston, (Tex.) 40 S. W. Rep. 1025.

Knowledge that a note was the property of an estate puts a purchaser on inquiry as to the authority of the guardian to negotiate. Gillespie v. Crawford, (Tex. Civ. App.) 42 S. W. Rep. 621.

That a note was taken from payee under a blank indorsement and that the husband of the holder, who was a maker, had the possession of it, did not charge a purchaser with notice of an equity, the husband having held it as the wife's agent. Bruinerd v. Bute, (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. Rep. 575.

Mere negligence in failing to inquire into suspicious circumstances did not charge purchaser with the knowledge inquiry would have revealed. Mulberger v. Morgan, (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. Rep. 379. See s. c., 47 S. W. Rep. 738; Rotan v. Mardgen, (Tex.) 59 S. W. Rep. 585; Turner v. Grobe, (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. Rep. 898.

Continued occupation by vendor was not notice of a claim of ownership to a broker negotiating a note for the purchase price. Stephens v. Summerfield, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 182.

On default of the contractor, one of the two sureties on his bond, who was president of the bank that advanced the money to the contractor, induced the other to execute a note to raise money with the bank to complete the contract upon the assurance that he would not be held liable and the note was simply for the purpose of showing to the bank examiner. In the absence of actual knowledge of the president's representations on the part of the bank it was allowed to recover on the note. Bank of Cleburne v. Carper, (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 188.

Purchaser was a bona fide holder, though the circumstances surrounding the transaction were sufficient to charge him with notice that it was for accommodation. Israel v. Gale, 77 Fed. Rep. 532.

Purchaser, who takes a note in good faith, though with knowledge of suspicious circumstances, is not guilty of such laches as will prevent his being a bona fide holder. Doe v. Northwestern Coal &c. Co., 78 Fed. Rep. 627.

See, also, Atlas Nat. Bank v. Holm, 71 Fed. Rep. 489; Germania Bank v. La Follette, 72 id. 145.

Knowledge that a holder of notes was president of the bank which was an indorser in blank thereon was not notice to a purchaser that the holder was not the owner thereof. Kaiser v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Fed. Rep. 281.

Rediscounting without other special circumstances is not so far out of the usual course of business as to charge a purchaser with knowledge that the transaction was unauthorized. United States Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Fed. Rep. 296.

A blank indorsement of a person neither a payee, indorsee nor assignee, being a guaranty, is presumed to be without consideration, and a purchaser is chargeable with notice accordingly. Lyon &c. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 85 Fed. Rep. 120.

A purchaser of a draft drawn by an officer of a railroad company, is negligent in failing to institute inquiry, where the latter asks for a certificate of deposit in his own name for the proceeds. Farmer's Loan &c. Co. v. Fidelity Trust Co., 86 Fed. Rep. 541.

Purchaser of a note made by a corporation to and indorsed by the officer making it for his own benefit is chargeable with notice of lack of authority. Park Hotel Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 86 Fed. Rep. 742.

A purchaser is negligent in not making inquiry concerning circumstances which would put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry and is chargeable with the knowledge inquiry would have revealed. Limerick Nat. Bank v. Adams, 70 Vt. 133.

See, also, Roth v. Allen, 32 Vt. 135.

Purchaser may recover, under a statute requiring proof of actual knowledge or evidence sufficient to show bad faith, to constitute notice of infirmity, where he made no inquiry as to the consideration except of payee, though he knew makers to be insolvent. McNamara v. Jose, (Wash.) 68 Pac. Rep. 903.

Knowledge that notes indorsed in blank by a corporation were given to it by the officer making the indorsement did not charge a purchaser with notice that it was accommodation paper. Hiawatha Iron Co. v. John Strange Paper Co., 106 Wis. 111.

I. Who Are Common Carriers.*

Persons, whose business it is to receive such goods as parties see fit to trust to their care for the purposes of transporting the same from one place to another for compensation, are common carriers. Sweet v. Barney, 23 N. Y. 335.

A common carrier exercises a quasi public employment, and has public duties to perform; he cannot reject a customer at pleasure, or charge any price that he chooses to demand; and if he refuses to carry goods according to the course of his employment, without a sufficient excuse, he will be liable to an action; and he can only demand a reasonable compensation for his risk and services (Bae. Abr. Carriers [B]; 2 Kent 599; Story on Bail, 328; 2 Ld. Raymond, 917; Skin. 279; 1 Salk. 249; 2 Show. R. 332; 8 Mees. & Wells, 372; 1 Pick. 50; 15 Conn. R. 539); and an action will lie against him upon a tort, arising ex delicto, for a breach of duty. Orange Co. Bank v. Brown, 3 Wend. 158. Dorr v. N. J. Steam Navigation Co., 11 N. Y. 485.

Common carriers include those who for transportation receive bullion, coin, bank-notes, commercial paper. Sweet v. Barney, 23 N. Y. 335.

A common carrier was defined in Gisburn v. Hurst, 1 Salk. 249, to be, "any man undertaking, for hire, to carry the goods of all persons indifferently;" and in Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. 50, to be, "one who undertakes, for hire to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him, from place to place." In Orange Bank v. Brown, 3 Wend. 161, Chief Justice Savage said: "Every person who undertakes to carry, for a compensation, the goods of all persons indifferently, is, as to the liability imposed, to be considered a common carrier. The distinction between a common carrier and a private or special carrier is, that the former holds himself out in common, that is, to all persons who choose to employ him, as ready to carry for hire; while the latter agrees, in some special case, with one private individual, to carry for hire." Story on Contracts, sec. 152a. The employment of a common carrier is a public one, and he assumes a public duty, and is bound to receive and carry the goods of anyone who offers. "On the whole," says Prof. Parsons, "it seems to be clear that no one can be considered as a common carrier, unless he has, in some way, held himself out to the public as a carrier, in such manner as to render him liable to an action if he should refuse to carry for any one who wished to employ him." 2 Pars. on Cont. (5th ed.) 166, note. Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341.

Express company is a common carrier. Belger v. Dinsmore, 51 N. Y. 166.

Ferry companies are common carriers, but not as to goods that passenger retains in his possession. Wyckoff v. Queens County Ferry Co., 52 N. Y. 34; disapproving of Fisher v. Clisbee, 12 Ill. 344; Powell v. Mills, 37 Mass. 691; Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio St. 722. White v. Winnisinmet 7 Cush. 155.

Defendants advertised themselves as general truckmen, their particular specialty being heavy machinery. They kept and maintained for this purpose a large number of trucks and horses and the necessary help for the prosecution of the business. They were employed to move heavy machinery and negligently injured it while unloading. It was held to be no legal error to refuse to instruct the jury that the defendants were not common carriers. Jackson &c. Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34; aff'g s. c., 15 Misc. 93.

From opinion.—"Truckman, wagoners, cartmen and porters who undertake to carry goods for hire as a common employment in a city or from one town to another, are common carriers. It is not necessary that the exclusive business of the parties shall be carrying. Where a person whose principal pursuit is farming, solicits goods to be carried to the market town in his wagon on certain occasions, he makes himself a common carrier for those who employ him. The circumstances that the defendants had no regular tariff of charges for their work, but that a special price was fixed by agreement, does not change the relation. The necessity for a different charge in each case arises, of course, out of the difference in labor in handling articles of great bulk. The charge in each case may be proportioned to the risk assumed and commensurate with the carrier's responsibility as such. A common carrier is one who, by virtue of his calling, undertakes, for compensation, to transport personal property from one place to another for all such as may choose to employ him, and every one who undertakes to carry for compensation the goods of all persons indifferently, is, as to liability, to be deemed a common carrier. (Bank of Orange v. Brown, 3 Wend. 158; Schouler on Bailments, and Carriers [2nd Ed.], 351; Story on Bailments, Sections 495, and 496; 2 Kent's Comm. [4th Ed.], pp. 598, 599; 2 Parsons on Contracts, 165, 175; Angell on Carriers, 870; Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341; Lough v. Outerbridge, 143 N. Y. 271)."

A warehouseman, whose contract of storage had expired, agreed to deliver the goods for which he was paid a certain price. It was held that from the moment of accepting such employment he became a common carrier and, the goods in the warehouse being in his possession as carrier, he was liable for their loss by fire as an insurer and not for negligence only. Snelling v. Yetter, 25 App. Div. 590.

Boatmen on canal employed in the transportation of property is a common carrier. Arnold v. Halenbake, 5 Wend. 33.

Also the owners of steamboats, railroads, canal boats, stage coaches, whose ordinary business is to carry goods. Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. 591, 594; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 id. 234.

An expressman soliciting the carriage of trunks and packages for hire. Robinson v. Cornish, 34 N. Y. St. R. 695.

(But, see, People ex rel. Walker v. Babcock, 16 Hun. 313, that express company will not be compelled by mandamus to carry goods subject to the common law liabilities of a common carrier. Relator should resort to an action for damages.)

A declaration alleging that defendant followed the occupation of master or owner of a steamboat plying on a navigable river sufficiently fixes the character of a common carrier upon him. Bennett v. Filyow, 1 Fla. 403.

The court will take notice that the owner of an omnibus line is a common carrier and liable as such for the loss of a passenger's trunk. Parmelee v. McNulty, 19 Ill. 556:

The mode of transporting is immaterial: the driver of a sled with an ox team, carrying sugar for hire, is a common carrier. Robertson v. Kennedy, 2 Dana. (Ky.) 430.

One who "hauled goods" as a common carrier within city limits under a license continued his liability by going beyond them. Farley v. Lavary, (Ky.) 54 S. W. Rep. 840.

One who engaged himself to any body who would employ him to deliver freight, packages, etc., was a common carrier. Cayo v. Pool's Assignee, (Ky.) 55 S. W. Rep. 887; s. c., 49 L. R. A. 251.

A transfer company contracting to remove plaintiff's trunk from depot. Da Ponte v. N. O. Transp. Co., 42 La. Ann. 696.

Proof of custom of street railway company to carry merchandise for hire fixes common carrier's liability on it for loss of a box of merchandise delivered to it to be carried on front platform of a car. Levi v. Lyon & Co., 11 Allen. 300.

An express company is a common carrier. Brockway v. American Exp. Co., 168 Mass. 257.

The owner of a canal boat used for transportation of merchandise. Humphreys v. Reed, 6 Wharton. (Pa.) 185.

Where a storekeeper carried goods for hire in his wagon, he was liable as common carrier for loss of them. Gordon v. Hutchinson, 1 Watts. & S. (Pa.) 285.

See "Ferry Companies," post p. 603.

The act of defendant's agent in receiving plaintiff's cotton on board defendant's boat, this boat being used for transporting of defendant's cotton, and sometimes that of others, fixed common carrier liability upon defendant. McClure v. Richardson, 1 Rice, (S. C.) 215.

A telephone company is a common carrier. Kirby v. Western Union Teleg. Co., 1 S. D. 623; s. c., 30 L. R. A. 621.

A company having no means of transportation of its own, but contracting with other companies to transport its goods, is a common carrier. Merchants' Despatch &c. Co. v. Bloch, 86 Tenn. 392.

Where the character of a steamboat company extended to the carrying of all commodities usually carried upon Lake Champlain, and proof showed that the bank bills were usually carried by the water craft on that lake, it would be liable for the loss of a package of bank bills delivered to captain of the boat for transportation, payment of fifty cents being made to him. Farmers &c. Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co., 23 Vt. 186.

Liability of defendants, owners of canal boats used in transporting lime for their own business but in the present instance carrying oats for the plaintiff under special contract, was that of a private carrier. Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559.

The mere fact defendants were receivers under appointment of Court of Chancery was no defense to a suit for loss of goods delivered to them as common carriers, when they had voluntarily assumed the duties of that business. Blumenthal v. Brainerd, 38 Vt. 402.

See "Receivers," ante p. 89.

II. Who Are Not Common Carriers.

The owners of a steamboat employed in the business of towing boats for hire are not common carriers. Caton v. Rumney, 13 Wend. 387, and Alexander v. Greene, 3 Hill, 9; Wells v. The Steam Navigation Co., 2 N. Y. 204.

It is not sufficient to charge the defendant as a common carrier, to prove that he was the owner of a sloop and was specially employed by plaintiffs to make a trip for a load of grain for which he was to receive a certain sum of money.

Where a person is employed as a special carrier, he is bound only to the exercise of ordinary care, skill or foresight, in the execution of his contract. Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 341.

See, to the same effect, Fish v. Clark, 49 N. Y. 122, aff'g 2 Lansing, 176; Merritt v. Brainerd, 38 Barb. 574; Arctic Ins. Co. v. Austin, 54 id. 559; Woodin v. Austin, 51 id. 9; aff'd in Court of Appeals, 4 Albany L. J. 113.

In action for an injury to cargo through negligence of the defendant while being towed by defendant's tug, Held,

(1) Contract for towing did not constitute defendants common carriers.

(2) Captain of tug was not master of crew or boats in tow, as to signals.

(3) Master of tow must use requisite care to guard against perils of navigation, and represents owner of freight.

(4) Where a canal boat in tow was run into and sunk by another tug owned by the same line, which owned the towing tug, that the owner of the cargo could not recover for its loss, it appearing that the omission to display proper lights upon the canal boat contributed to the injury.

(5) The rule might be different as to third and innocent persons. The Arctic Fire Insurance Co. v. Austin, 69 N. Y. 470; rev'g 3 Hun, 195.

"A," contracting with "B," owner of a scow, for transportation of cattle, cannot recover for negligence of "C," owner of a tug boat, employed by "B," without "A's" privity. Baird v. Daly, 4 Lansing, 426. But the judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeals and an action against "C" by "A" allowed on the ground that in an action founded on negligence either the bailee or bailor may sue for damage done by a third party. Baird v. Daly, 57 N. Y. 236.

The owner of a tug used for towing purposes is not a common carrier and is not liable as an insurer, but there is an implied warranty that the tug is seaworthy (Putnam v. Wood, 3 Mass. 481-485; Kopitoff v. Wilson, 1 Q. B. Div. 377-380; Cohn v. Davidson, 2 id. 455; The Omoa Coal and Iron Co. v. Huntley, 2 C. P. Div. 464; 1 Par. Mar. L. 238), and the master must exercise reasonable care and skill in its management (the "Margaret," 94 U. S. 494-496; The Steamer "Webb", 14 Wall. 406; Wells v. The Steam Navigation Co., 8 N. Y. 375); and whether he was negligent in not anchoring instead of proceeding by night, where the course lay between certain shoals, was a question of fact for a jury.

Vessel not commanded by competent officer is unseaworthy. Walden v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 12 John. 128-134; Draper v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Duer, 234; 2 Par. Mar. L. 135; Teho v. Jordan, 67 Hun, 392; s. c. 62 id. 571.

A vessel not commanded by competent officers is unseaworthy, but not because navigated by unlicensed pilot, although statute requires pilot to be licensed; but this puts burden on owner to show that when stranded she was in command of a competent commander or pilot. Tebo v. Jordan, 73 Hun. 218; s. c. aff'd, 147 N. Y. 387.

An agreement to restore a vessel in as good condition as when taken with the exception of ordinary use and wear, does not make the bailee an insurer. Ames v. Belden, 17 Barb. 513; Hyland v. Paul, 33 id. 241.

The charterer or lessee of a canal boat is not liable to the owner for injuries to the boat which are the result of the negligence of those in command of tugs engaged by him to tow the boat from place to place, and which belong to a company engaged in the business of towing. The plaintiff could recover against the employees of those in command of the tugs. The Steamer Webb, 14 Wall. 406; The Margaret, 94 U. S. 494; McLaughlin v. The New York Lighterage &c. Co., 7 Misc. 119. (New York Common Pleas).

Owner of a steamboat, though engaged in the business of towing, towed only for a single party. He was not a common carrier. Knapp, &c. v. McCaffrey, 178 Ill. 107; aff'g s. c., 74 Ill. App. 80.

An officer of a railroad, shipping his own freight over its lines, was not within a constitutional provision forbidding officers to do business as common carriers over its lines. Bucksport &c. R. Co. v. Edinburgh &c. Redwood Co., 68 Fed. Rep. 972.

III. Demise of a Vessel.

The owners of a line of canal boats engaged in the business of common carriers of passengers and goods, who charter a boat to another transportation company for a single trip, retaining the charge of it and navigating it with their own master and crew, are liable to a passenger for the loss of his goods upon the passage. Campbell v. Perkins, 8 N. Y. 430.

See Bissell v. Torrey, 60 N. Y. 635.

Vessel owners chartered her for a voyage for a cargo, save room for crew, etc. Held, that the owners retained possession of the vessel and were liable for a delay. Action arose between parties to charter party.

(1) Unless charter party was demise of ship itself, as contra-distinguished from a right to have goods conveyed by the vessel, the owners are liable for negligence in its operation. 1 Parsons on Shipping and Admiralty 278; Drinkwater v. Brigg Spartan, 1 Ware, 145; Eames v. Cararoe, 1 Newb. 528; Sherman v. Fram, 30 Barb. 478.

(2) Presumption favors continuance of ownership, although there be express words of grant in formal parts of the instrument. Donahue v. Kettell, 1 Clifford 135; 2 Pars. on Contracts 437; Certain Logs of Mahogany, 2 Sum. 589; The Aberfoyle, 1 Abb. Ad. Rep. 242.

(3) The entire command and possession and control of a vessel must be surrendered to charterer before he becomes a special owner for the voyage. McIntyre v. Bowne, 1 J. R. 229; Hoe v. Groverman, 1 Cranch, 214; Marcadier v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 8 id. 49; Clarkson v. Edes, 4 Cow. 470; Drinkwater v. Brigg Spartan, 1 Ware, 149; Donahue v. Kettell, supra; *Leary v. U. When general owner retains possession, command and navigation of ship, and contracts to carry cargo for voyage, the charter party is mere affreightment sounding in covenant, and freighter is not clothed with character or legal responsibility of ownership. But delivery of goods, received from the charterer, to the consignees of the cargo at the port of destination absolves such shipowner from liability to the owner of the goods in absence of notice of ownership. Robinson v. Chittenden, 69 N. Y. 525; rev'g s. c., 7 Hun, 133.

See, also, Campbell v. Perkins, 8 N. Y. 432; Parish v. Crawford, 2 Strange Rep. 1251; Clarkson v. Edes, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 470; Mactaggert v. Henry, 3 E. D. Smith, 398; Marcadier v. The Chesapeake Ins. Co., 8 Cranch, 49.

The master, one of several owners, sailed vessel on shares, himself paying for manning, victualing, etc. This was not a demise and the owners were held liable for negligence in the case of a seaman. Scarff v. Metcalf, 107 N. Y. 211.

Where a manufacturing corporation acts as a common carrier, it, and not its officers, is liable upon contracts made by them for it, although the right to act as a carrier is not within its chartered powers. Linkhauf v. Lombard, 137 N. Y. 117.

See "Landlord and Tenant," post p. 1316.

Owners of a steamboat, not in control thereof, are not liable for the negligence of those who are. Gulzoni v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 334.

Owner of a tug is not liable for injury to a scow where his manager, after being engaged to tow a scow load of hay, gave orders to a third person to get another tug, and tow the scow. Bleecker v. Salsop R. Co., 4 Wash. 77.

IV. When Liability Begins.

The liability of a common carrier, as such, begins when goods are delivered to him, at the place appointed or provided for their reception, in a proper condition and ready for immediate transportation.

This rule applies to a railroad company to whom property has been delivered at one of its stations for immediate transportation although it may not be able promptly to transport it, and there may be long storage of the property until cars can be furnished, and this, although by agreement of the parties it is the duty of the shipper to load it on the cars when furnished.

Action was for the destruction by fire of hay, alleged to have been delivered to defendant. The hay was delivered in bales for immediate shipment, and placed in defendant's freight house, under the direction of its freight agent, where it was burned. It was the usage and regulation of defendant, assented to by the shippers, that they were to load such freight into defendant's cars. Unless a delay in the shipment was caused by some fault of the shippers in not shipping the hay on cars furnished, it was liable. London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. v. Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad Co., 144 N. Y. 200; aff'g s. c., 68 Hun, 598.

From opinion.—There is no doubt that it is the duty, generally, of a railroad company to load the freight delivered to it for transportation into its cars, and that it cannot generally devolve this duty by any regulation upon the shipper; and that it cannot legally, as a condition of transportation generally, exact from the shipper a contract to place the freight into its cars. But we know from our own observation that as to hay, lumber, sawlogs, live animals and other bulky freight, the shipper usually loads the freight into the cars. We need not, however, now decide whether a railroad company can, as to such bulky freight, make a regulation that the shipper shall load it, because here the shippers acquiesced in the regulation and undertook the duty of loading. But we do not think that the fact that the shipper undertakes to load the freight into the cars necessarily postpones the time when the railroad company takes on the character of a common carrier. The rule as to the responsibility of the carrier is laid down in varying phraseology in a variety of cases, as follows: To render a common carrier liable for goods to be carried by him, the fact that the goods were actually delivered to him, or to some person authorized to act in his behalf, must be established. His liability attaches only from the time he accepts the goods to be carried. To complete the delivery of goods to the carrier it is essential that the property be placed in a position to be cared for, and under the control of the carrier or his agent, with his knowledge and consent. The liability of a railroad company as a common carrier of goods delivered to it attaches only when the duty of immediate transportation arises. So long as the shipment is delayed for further orders as to destination of the goods, or for the convenience of the owners, the liability of the company is that of warehousemen. The liability of a common carrier for goods received by him begins as soon as they are delivered to him, his agents or servants, at the place appointed or provided for their reception when they are in a fit and proper condition and ready for immediate transportation. If a common carrier receives goods into his own warehouse for the accommodation of himself and his customers, so that the deposit there is a mere accessory to the carriage and for the purpose of facilitating it, his liability as a carrier will commence with the receipt of the goods. But on the contrary, if the goods when so deposited are not ready for immediate transportation, and the carrier cannot make arrangements for their carriage to the place of destination until something further is done or some further direction is given or communication made concerning them by the owner, or consignor, the deposit must be considered to be in the meantime for his convenience and accommodation, and the receiver until some change takes place will be responsible only as a warehouseman. The party bringing the goods must first do whatever is essential to enable the carrier to commence, or to make needful preparation for commencing, the service required of him, before he can be made liable or subjected to responsibility in that capacity. Where goods are delivered to a common carrier to await further orders from the shipper before shipment, the former while they are in his custody is only liable as warehouseman, and his only responsibility as carrier is where goods are delivered to and accepted by him in the usual course of business for immediate transportation. The duties and the obligations of the common carrier with respect to the goods commence with their delivery to him, and this delivery must be complete, so as to put upon him the exclusive duty of seeing to their safety. The law will not divide the duty or the obligation between the carrier and the owner of the goods. It must rest entirely upon the one or the other, and until it has become imposed upon the carrier by a delivery and acceptance, he cannot be held responsible for them. The entire weight of the responsibility rigorously imposed by law upon a common carrier falls upon him contemporaneously (co instanti) with a complete delivery of the goods to be forwarded, if accepted, with or without a special agreement as to reward; for the obligation to carry safely on delivery carries with it a promise to keep safely before the goods are put in itinere. Judson v. Western R. R. Co., 4 Allen, 520; Baron v. Eldridge, 100 Mass. 455; Grosvenor v. R. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 34; O'Neill v. R. R. Co., 60 id. 138; Redfield on Carriers, 80; Angell on Carriers, sec. 129. In Wilson v. Atlanta & Charlotte R. R. Co. (82 Ga. 386), a case somewhat relied on by defendant's counsel, a quantity of wood was piled along the line of the defendant's railroad for the purpose of having it transported thereon, and the shipper was to place the wood in the defendant's cars. There the action was brought to recover damages on account of unreasonable delay in transporting some of the wood, and, also, for the loss of some portion thereof. The plaintiff failed to recover on the ground that upon all the facts in that case the wood had not been delivered to and accepted by the railroad company for immediate shipment; and no principle was laid down in that case which can be invoked for the protection of the defendant in this. Here the hay was delivered to the defendant for immediate shipment, and it was accepted by it and placed in its freight house.

There was evidence tending to show that the freight had been paid that horses were placed in a shed designated by the defendant's servants and were loaded under the superintendence of one of them, that the horse in question was restive and refused to enter the box used for loading them, and he was, therefore, backed in and went through the door at the other end, off the dock, and was drowned. Held, that this evidence justified a finding that the horses were in the possession of the defendant.

The liability of a common carrier attaches when the property is deposited with him for transportation; and where a party, who is both a common carrier and a warehouseman receives goods into his warehouse to be transported by him, his responsibility as a common carrier commences when they are received. Giblin v. The National Steamship Co., 8 Misc. 22; s. c. aff'd, 152 N. Y. 633.

Goods were loaded upon a spur track of a railroad, but the owner having no scales, the cars were moved to the station for weight to fix the freight charges. There was no delivery before reaching the station, as something yet remained to be done by the shipper before he relinquished control. Dixon v. Central &c. R. Co., 110 Ga. 173.

Carrier was liable for theft of goods left in its warehouse when wrongfully rejected by one whom it allowed to hold itself out as an authorized agent, where the shipper had not the opportunity to safeguard them. Seasongood v. Tennessee &c. Transp. Co., (Ky.) 54 S. W. Rep. 193.

Carrier was liable for a trunk delivered to a sub-agent employed by it. Hamil v. New York &c. Ex. Co., 117 Mass. 414.

Goods placed in a freight depot for immediate shipment, are in carrier's custody, from the moment of delivery, though it was agreed that they were to go the following morning. Meloche v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 116 Mich. 69.

Goods were delivered for shipment and left at depot but were not shipped because of a personal dispute between the agent and the shipper. Carrier was liable. Launing v. Sussex R. Co., 1 N. J. Law J. 21.

Loss of timber by fire, loaded on defendant's car not chargeable to defendant, when shipper did not notify the company that it was ready, nor give the name of consignee. Basnigh v. Atlantic & C. R. Co., 111 N. C. 592.

Upon a delivery and acceptance of goods, under the circumstances stated, the common law liability of a common carrier immediately attaches, and if they are lost by fire, while awaiting shipment, the carrier is liable to the same extent as if the goods were in transit, unless his liability has been modified, limited or restricted with the consent of the shipper or owner of the goods. Miriam v. Hartford & New Haven R. Co., 20 Conn. 354; Trowbridge v. Chapin, 23 Conn. 595; 2 Redfield on Railways, 63, sec. 174; Ford v. Mitchell, 21 Ind. 54; Gleason v. Transportation Co., 32 Wis. 85; O'Bannon v. Southern Express Co., 51 Ala. 481; Grosvenor v. New York Central R. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 34; Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Smyser, 38 Ill. 354; Burrell v. North, 2 Car. & Kir. 680; Schouler on Bailments, 381, ch. 4.

But, if anything remained to be done to the goods by the shipper before they are ready for transportation, or if any orders, directions or instructions were to be given before they were to be forwarded, such liability does not attach. Judson v. Western R. R. Co., 4 Allen, 520; Moses v. Boston & Maine R. R. 4 Foster (32 N. H.) 71; Blossom v. Griffin, 3 Kernan 513; Michigan Southern R. R. v. Schurtz, 7 Mich. 515; St. Louis, etc. R. Co. v. Montgomery, 39 Ill. 335; Lawrence v. W. & St. P. Railway, 15 Minn. 390; Watts v. Boston & Lowell R. R., 106 Mass. 466; Bannon v. Eldridge, 100 Mass. 457; Railroad Co. v. Barrett, 36 Ohio St. 448.

The opening of an upper door of a warehouse of a railroad company after dark, when the place had been locked for the night, and putting goods therein, was not a delivery thereof to the carrier, though the agent a short distance away was notified and requested to ship them the following morning. Spofford v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 97.

Cotton, placed for shipment on a platform kept for that purpose, was held to be delivered to the company, though a bill of lading had not at the time been given. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Martin, (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. Rep. 28.

Property was received for immediate transportation after hours. It was held to have been delivered, though the bill of lading was not to be given till the next day. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Compton, (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. Rep. 220.

The liability of a common carrier of goods and merchandise attaches when the property passes, with his assent, into his possession, and is not affected by the carriage in which it is transported, or the fact that the carriage is loaded by the owner. The common carrier is an insurer of the property carried, and upon him the duty rests to see that the packing and conveyance are such as to secure its safety. Hannibal Railroad v. Swift, 12 Wall. Rep. 262, aff'g judgt for plff.

V. From What Duty Springs.

The liability of a common carrier does not rest on his contract, but is a liability imposed by law. It exists, independent of the contract, having its foundation in the policy of the law; it is upon this legal obligation that he is charged as carrier for the loss of property intrusted to him. Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115.

Edwards on Bail., 466; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 239; Ansell v. Waterhouse, 1 Chitty R. 1; Hannibal R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 262.

The obligations of a common carrier are imposed by law and not by contract. Myuard v. Syracuse &c. R. Co., 41 N. Y. 180, 183.

A railroad company was forced by mandamus to furnish equal facilities to rival interests. Cumberland &c. Telegraph Co. v. Texas &c. R. Co., 52 La. Ann. 1850.

But a carrier is under no duty to carry dangerous articles. California Powder Works v. Atlantic, &c. R. Co., 113 Cal. 329.

Carrier is not bound to accept freight not properly prepared for shipment. Elgin &c. R. Co. v. Bates Mach. Co., 98 Ill. App. 311.

By basing recovery on negligence as a carrier at common law, recovery on contract is precluded. Pennsylvania Co. v. Walker, (Ind. App.) 64 N. E. Rep. 413.

VI. Extent of Liability.

A common carrier in the carriage and delivery of goods, insures against all losses, except those occasioned by the act of God or the public enemy. Dorr v. N. J. Steam Navigation Co., 11 N. Y. 485, 493; Merritt v. Earle, 29 id. 115.

Neither destruction by fire nor robbery by armed men will excuse loss. Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 238.

From opinion.—"This is a politic establishment, contrived by the policy of the law for the safety of all persons, the necessity of whose affairs oblige them to trust these sort of persons, that they may be safe in their ways of dealing." In Forward v. Pittard, (1 T. R. 27) where the carrier was held liable for loss by fire, Lord Mansfield said, that "to prevent litigation, collusion, and the necessity of going into circumstances impossible to be unravelled, the law presumes against the carrier, unless he shows it was done by the king's enemies, or by such act as could not happen by the intervention of man, as storms, lightnings, and tempests." And in relation to a loss by robbery he said, "the true reason is, for fear it may give room for collusion, that the master may contrive to be robbed on purpose, and share the spoil." The rule has been fully recognized in this state. Colt v. McMeheen, 6 Johns. R. 160; Elliott v. Rossell, 10 id. 1; Kemp v. Coughtry, 11 id. 107. In Roberts v. Turner, 12 id. 232, Spencer, J., said, the carrier "is held responsible as an insurer of the goods, to prevent combinations, chicanery, and fraud."

A common carrier is subject to two distinct classes of liabilities—one where he is liable as an insurer without fault on his part, the other, as an ordinary bailee for hire, when he is liable for default in not exercising proper care and diligence; or, in other words, for negligence. Mynard v. Syracuse &c. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 180.

Loss of goods by a fire, unexplainable, unless caused by a driver's pipe, was not by act of God or the public enemy and the carrier was liable as insurer. Farley v. Lavary, (Ky.) 54 S. W. Rep. 840.

Carrier is not liable to an owner for accepting goods from the person in whose possession they are at the time. Livestock &c. Co. v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 87 Mo. App. 330.

Goods were received in New York for delivery in Ohio. Law of Ohio governed as the place of performance. Jacobson v. Adams Ex. Co., 1 Oh. C. D. 212.

A carrier owning capital stock of another is not liable for latter's negligence. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Lee, (Tex. Civ. App.) 65 S. W. Rep. 54.

Carrier owes no duty to the sendee of package through the mails, though lost through negligence. German State Bank v. Minneapolis &c. R. Co., 113 Fed. Rep. 414.

VII. Delay in Transportation.

A common carrier does not insure against delays, but is liable for injury from same, caused by his negligence.

The law, upon well known motives of policy, has determined that a carrier shall be responsible for loss of property entrusted to him for transportation, though no actual negligence exist, unless it happen in consequence of the act of God, or the public enemy; but when the goods are actually delivered at the place of destination, and the complaint is only of a late delivery, the question is simply one of reasonable diligence, and accident or misfortune will excuse him, unless he have expressly contracted to deliver the goods within a limited time. Parsons v. Hardy, 11 Wend. 215; Harmony v. Bingham, ante 99. If an unusual amount of freight be received, and the carrier has properly equipped its road and runs as many trains as safety permits, and forwards freight in the order of its receipts, it is not liable for delay caused by the accumulation of freight, notwithstanding chapter 140, Laws 1850, sec. 36, which act contemplates that it may not always be in the power of a railroad company to dispatch either passengers or freight immediately upon their arrival at a station or junction, and it therefore allows the company a reasonable time after their arrival and the offer of property for transportation to set it in motion from such starting point or junction. Wibert v. The N. Y. & Erie R. Co., 12 N. Y. 245; aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

Delay in transportation does not necessarily constitute conversion nor justify consignee in not accepting the goods, so far as the carrier is concerned. Carrier is bound to use all reasonable diligence. Verdict of two dollars for plaintiff sustained on plaintiff's appeal. Scovill v. Griffith, 12 N. Y. 509.

From opinion.—"This property was, for some cause, detained in Troy, some half dozen miles from Albany, about six weeks; and the defendant, during that time, made no effort to send it to its destination. This was inexcusable delay, and undoubtedly entitled the plaintiffs to all real damages sustained by them which were the natural consequences of the neglect. But it does not follow that the plaintiffs had a right to refuse and abandon the property and recover its full value. There is no evidence of a refusal to deliver, nor indeed that the plaintiffs ever demanded the property or gave the defendant notice that it had not been received. They were not bound to do either to give them a right of action. But the judge could not say to the jury, as a matter of law, that there had been a conversion; nor does it appear that the property had deteriorated in condition or had seriously depreciated in value, nor was it lost. Where there has been a deterioration and loss the carrier is liable. Davis v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716; Ellis v. Turner, 8 T. R. 531; Story on Bail, § 608. In Ellis v. Turner, which was an action on the case, the carrier conveyed the goods beyond the place of destination, intending to deliver them on his return, but they were greatly damaged by the sinking of the vessel without any want of ordinary care or attention of the master or crew, and the carrier was held liable to make good the loss. Under the former system, to maintain trover against a carrier, there must have been an unjustifiable refusal to deliver or delivery to a wrong person, or sale or destruction, or some actual wrong or injurious conversion: something more than mere omission. Packard v. Getman, 4 Wend. 613; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill, 586; 2 Saund. R. 49, i. k. m. It was not necessary that the wrong should be intentional; but, as a general rule, a mere non-feasance did not and does not work a conversion. And, indeed, every unauthorized intermeddling with the property of another is not a conversion. It was held by the Court of Exchequer in England that the act of the ferryman in putting the horses of the plaintiff on shore out of his ferry boat, though the jury should find it was done wrongfully, and not a conversion of the property, unless done with the intent to convert it to his own use or that of some third person, or unless the act had the effect to destroy it or change its quality. Fouldes v. Willoughby, 8 M. & W. 540. If it had appeared in this case that the defendant, from gross negligence, evincing a disregard of his contract and the rights of the plaintiffs, had carried the property by and on to another port, and had, with the actual knowledge of all the facts, kept it several weeks, I am not prepared to say the jury might not have found that there was something more than omission, or that the evidence would not have sustained a verdict that the defendant was guilty of conversion, if rendered under a proper charge from the court."

It has been repeatedly held, and may be taken as settled law, that a carrier is not under the same absolute obligation to carry the goods intrusted to him in the usual time, which he is to deliver them ultimately at their destination. Conger v. The Hudson River R. R. Co., 6 Duer 375; Wibert v. The N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 2 Kern. 245. But in the absence of a legal excuse, he is answerable for any delay to forward them in the time which is ordinarily required for transportation, by the kind of conveyance which he uses. Blackstock v. N. Y. & E. R. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 50.

A railroad carrier stands upon the same footing as other carriers, and may excuse delay in the delivery of goods by accident or misfortune not inevitable or produced by the act of God. All that can be required of it in any emergency is that it shall exercise due care and diligence to guard against delay, and to forward the goods to their destination; and so it has been uniformly decided. Wibert v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 245; Blackstock v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 20 id. 48.

In the absence of special contract there is no absolute duty resting upon a railroad carrier to deliver the goods intrusted to it within what, under ordinary circumstances, would be reasonable time. Not only storms and floods, and other natural causes, may excuse delay, but the conduct of men may also do so. Geisner v. L. S. & M. S. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 563.

When cotton was to be taken by one of two boats, the first leaving October 27th, and is only delivered on the 26th, when freight sufficient for the first boat had previously been delivered, transportation by second boat is sufficient. Fowler v. Liverpool & G. W. S. Co., 23 Hun. 196; s. c. aff'd, 87 N. Y. 190.

A delay in the unloading of stone is not unreasonable where the work did not proceed as fast as usual because of an unprecedented amount of freight to be handled. The carrier had proper facilities for its usual business and plaintiff was not neglected. There was no special agreement as to time. Bouker v. Long Island R. Co., 89 Hun. 202.

Defendant was liable for a bicycle which it undertook to transport from New York to Sussex in Canada in June for use during vacation, where it failed to pay any attention to it until August, when it would have been useless. Mitchell v. Weir, 19 App. Div. 183; aff'g s. c., 19 Misc. 530.

Carrier was not liable for the freezing of plants, unless the delay was the proximate cause of the freezing. Siebrecht v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 21 Misc. 615; aff'g s. c., 20 id. 130.

Bill of lading guaranteed through rates and specified no route. Carrier was liable for loss during a delay caused by holding the goods for shipment by the regular route, where they might have been shipped by another. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Gidley, 119 Ala. 523.

A bill of lading was issued to a consignor for a prospective shipment for the alleged accommodation of the consignee. Carrier was not liable for delay under the bill, notwithstanding a statute providing that loss resulting from issuing bills of lading without receipt of goods shall fall on the carrier, where the delay was the fault of the shipper. Thompson v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 122 Ala. 378.

A carrier was liable for the consequences of a delay owing to the abandonment for lack of freight of the train for which the cattle were loaded. Kansas &c. R. Co. v. Ayers, 63 Ark. 331.

Delay in transporting stock by allowing train for which they were loaded to pass without taking them makes carrier liable for damage suffered. Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Waters, 41 Ill. 73.

Delay was caused by lack of repairs of an engine. That the weather was very cold was no excuse for allowing water to freeze in the pipes thereof. It was not within an exemption of stress of weather as such weather was to be expected at that time of the year. Cleveland &c. R. Co. v. Heath, 22 Ind. App. 47.

Delay was by the shipper's act, where he failed to comply with the regulation that a car must be loaded by a time certain to be forwarded on that day. Stoner v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 109 Iowa, 551.

Carrier was liable for a loss by fire during an unnecessary delay. Hernsheim v. Newport News &c. Co., (Ky.) 35 S. W. Rep. 1115.

Carrier was liable for a delay through scarcity of water on account of a drought, where the contract was made during a drought. Cincinnati &c. R. Co. v. Webb, (Ky.) 46 S. W. Rep. 11.

Defendant was liable for a delay in delivery to a connecting carrier, the result of changing stock from one car to another, when they were billed to go "through" in one car. Felton v. McCreary &c. Stock Co., (Ky.) 59 S. W. Rep. 744.

Delay of a few hours in arrival of a corpse not needing immediate burial did not warrant a verdict of $1,640. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Hull, (Ky.) 68 S. W. Rep. 433.

Service of a garnishee process was no excuse for delaying transportation, though to a destination out of the state. Baldwin v. Great Northern R. Co., 81 Minn. 247; s. c., 51 L. R. A. 610.

A carrier of perishable goods was negligent, where, after an unavoidable delay, instead of shipping them direct to their destination over another line, it forwarded them to another place on its own line where they were sold at a reduced price. Alabama &c. R. Co. v. Brichetto, 72 Miss. 891.

A carrier was not liable for loss by fire, during a delay which was not the proximate cause of the injury. Yazoo &c. R. Co. v. Millsaps, 76 Miss. 855.

Freedom from negligence as to a delay was no defense for failing to forward cattle at a time certain, as agreed. Gann v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 72 Mo. App. 34.

Sudden snow storm held a sufficient excuse for delay. Cunningham v. Wabash R. Co., 79 Mo. App. 524.

Temporary obstruction of a warehouse by freight, which could have been quickly disposed of, was not a sufficient excuse for a long delay. Klass Commission Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 80 Mo. App. 164.

Carrier could not avail itself of a stipulation against liability for delay, where its agent falsely represented that its train would make connections. Hamilton v. Wabash R. Co., 80 Mo. App. 597.

Frequent and unnecessary delays amounting to six hours in two hundred miles was unreasonable. Minter v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 82 Mo. App. 130.

Twenty-four hours for transportation, where it usually took 13 to 15, raises a presumption of negligence. Anderson v. Atchison &c. R. Co., (Mo. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 707.

Negligence of delay was for the jury, where it appeared that the train on which cattle were shipped arrived at its destination at seven in the morning, but plaintiff's cars were delayed and did not arrive until ten. Sloop v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 956.

Defendant consumed 84 hours in traveling 400 miles. Held not reasonably diligent. Hinkle v. Southern R. Co., 126 N. C. 932.

Where no time is specified, a reasonable time for performance is allowed. A delay of 48 hours in the delivering of cattle, after the time, when by the usual and ordinary custom they should have arrived, was unreasonable. Denman v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 52 Neb. 140.

It was no excuse for unreasonable delay on its own line that the cattle would not have reached their destination sooner had it connected with the other carrier on time. Alexander v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 183.

The fact that the shipper was imprudent in failing to order the goods sooner, and his own lack of care after delivery, did not prevent his recovering such actual damages as he sustained by reason of the delay in transportation. Belcher v. Missouri &c. R. Co., 92 Tex. 593; rev'g s. c., 17 S. W. Rep. 384, 1020.

Carrier was negligent in sending a corpse by a longer route than was necessary. Wells &c. Co.'s Express v. Fuller, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 610.

An extraordinary flood was no excuse for delay where the effects could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable diligence. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Bland, (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. Rep. 675.

A wait of seven hours for train by which cattle can be forwarded after the rest, feed and water, required by statute, was not unreasonable, there being no specified time for transportation. Galveston &c. R. Co. v. Warnken, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 645.

Liability of a carrier for delay was not increased by failure to sell the goods, where it was not notified that their character required quick delivery. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Cates, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 135.

A written contract for the shipment of cattle specified no particular time for delivery. It was held that the carrier had a reasonable time and evidence as to an agent's promise to deliver for a particular market was inadmissible. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Baugh, (Tex. Civ. App.) 42 S. W. Rep. 245.

Defendant was liable for a delay caused by the breaking down of an engine, where it agreed to carry within a given time. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Davis, (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. Rep. 381; s. c., reversed on another point, 55 S. W. Rep. 562.

Carrier's liability for delay cannot be increased by special damages, unless it have knowledge of the exceptional necessity for prompt delivery. International &c. R. Co. v. Hutchell, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 498.

A carrier, contracting to carry by a given route, was liable for damage due to a diversion though made from necessity. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Liebold, (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. Rep. 368.

Plaintiff shipped cattle to a point which ordinarily took three days. They did not arrive until Saturday and too late for sale on that day. The delay was unreasonable. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Wells, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 304.

Defendant's agent had knowledge of plaintiff's illness, that she had worked for a relative, and that a package carried by it directed to the relative contained medicine. It was held insufficient to constitute notice to defendant that the medicine was for plaintiff, so as to increase its liability for delay by special damages. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Redman, (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. Rep. 677.

Carrier was liable for results of delay though it had not notice that special damage would occur. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Bigham, (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 522.

The reasonable time within which a carrier must deliver goods was dependent upon peculiar circumstances connected with the consignor's contract of sale and delivery, of which the carrier had notice. Though not expressed in the bill of lading, evidence thereof was admitted on the measure of damages. Central Trust Co. v. Savannah &c. R. Co., 69 Fed. Rep. 683.

Leave reserved in contract of affreightment to tow and assist vessels in all situations is no excuse for a vessel going 200 miles out of the way for her own convenience. Schwarzkild v. National Steamship Co., 74 Fed. Rep. 257.

Delay of a river transport company, which a carrier employed in transferring cattle over a portion of the route, was no defense in an action for the delay of the carrier. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Edwards, 78 Fed. Rep. 745.

Heavy dew was not a sufficient excuse for delay as it was the carrier's duty to provide against it. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Truskett, 104 Fed. Rep. 728.

Carrier was not liable for delay in delivery of goods refused clearance as contraband of war, especially where the bill of lading stipulated "subject to delay." Farmers' &c. T. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co., 112 Fed. Rep. 829.

Notice subsequent to shipment of a special necessity for prompt delivery did not increase a carrier's liability for a delay. Bradley v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 94 Wis. 44.

Shipper of stock over different lines of railway must be held to contemplate the delays which appear from the time table to be necessary to make connections. Burns v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 104 Wis. 646.

(a) STRIKES OF EMPLOYÉS.

Strikes of employés may excuse delays, if they be accompanied by violence impeding operation of trains.

Mere cessation of labor by employés will not excuse failure to operate.

A railroad corporation is responsible for damages resulting from a delay to transport freight in the usual time, which was caused by a great number of its servants suddenly and wrongfully refusing to work.

Of 168 engineers in the employ of a railroad company, 140 suddenly and by concert abandoned their engines for the purpose of compelling the company to rescind a reasonable regulation. Held, although the superior officers were without the slightest fault, the corporation was responsible for the damages caused by a delay in transporting property which resulted from the strike. Blackstock v. N. Y. & Erie R. Co., 20 N. Y. 48.

Live stock was stopped and delayed by strike of the men who violently prevented its going forward. Although the strike was organized by the defendant's servants, they ceased to be such when they refused to obey orders, and the defendant was not liable. Geismer v. L. S. & M. S. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 563; rev'g 34 Hun. 50.

This case distinguishes Weed v. Panama R. Co., 17 N. Y. 362, where it was held that it is no defense to an action against a railroad corporation for its failure to transport a passenger with proper dispatch, that the detention was the willful act of a conductor in charge of the train.

From opinion.—"Here upon the facts, which we must assume to be true, there was no default on the part of the defendant. It had employes who were ready and willing to manage its train and carry forward the stock, and thus perform its contract and discharge its duty; but they were prevented by mob violence which the defendant could not by reasonable efforts overcome. That under such circumstances the delay was excused has been held in several cases quite analogous to this which are entitled to much respect as authorities. Pittsburg & C. R. R. Co. v. Hogen, 84 Ill. 36; Pittsburg C. W. L. R. Co. v. Hollowell, 65 Ind. 188; Bennett v. L. S. & M. S. R. R. Co., 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 301; I. & W. L. R. R. Co. v. Juntzen, 10 Bardwell, 295.

The cases of Weed v. Panama R. R. Co., 17 N. Y. 362, and Blackstock v. N. Y. & E. R. R. Co., 1 Bosw. 77; aff'd 20 N. Y. 48, do not sustain the plaintiff's contention here. If, in this case, the employes of the defendant had simply refused to discharge their duties, or to work, or had suddenly abandoned its service, offering no violence, and causing no forcible obstruction to its business, those authorities could have been cited for the maintenance of an action upon principles stated in the opinions of those cases."

On account of a strike defendant was justified in changing the route by which it was transporting plaintiff's stock, although through failure of plaintiff to learn of the change, he was unable to properly care for the stock. Defendant was not liable. Steiger v. Erie R. Co., 5 Hun. 345.

In an action brought by the people, by their attorney-general, a railroad corporation may be compelled by mandamus to exercise its duties as a carrier of freight and passengers.

The power to so compel it rests upon the ground:

1st. That the duty is a public trust, which, having been conferred by the state and accepted by the corporation, may be enforced for the public benefit.

2nd. Upon the contract between the corporation and the state, expressed in its charter or implied by the acceptance of the franchise.

3rd. Upon the ground that the common right of all the people to travel and carry upon every public highway of the state has been changed in this special instance by the legislature, for adequate reasons, into a corporate franchise, to be exercised solely by a corporate body, for the public benefit, to the exclusion of all other persons; whereby it has become the duty of the state to see to it that the franchise so put in trust be faithfully administered by the trustee.

It is no excuse for the non-performance of its duties by the company that its skilled freight handlers, who had been working at the rate of seventeen cents per hour (or one dollar and seventy cents for ten hours) refused to work unless twenty cents per hour (or two dollars per day, of ten hours) was paid. It was not alleged that the workmen committed any unlawful act; and no violence, riot or unlawful interference with the other employes of the respondent was shown.

If it had been shown that a "strike" of their skilled laborers had been caused or compelled by some illegal combination or organized body, which held unlawful control of their actions, and sought through them to enforce its will upon the respondent, and that the respondent in resisting such unlawful efforts had refused to obey unjust and illegal dictation; and had used all the means in its power to employ other men in sufficient numbers to do the work; and that the refusal and neglect complained of had grown out of such a state of facts, a very different case for the exercise of the discretion of the court, as well as of the attorney-general, would have been presented. People v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 28 Hun, 543.

The defendant claimed that it was prevented from transporting the property to the place of destination within the usual time, by riotous and tumultuous assemblages of persons, who by force and violence detained and delayed the transportation without its fault, and that the delivery of the goods was made as soon, and in as good condition, as it was able to make it. The evidence tended to prove that the goods arrived at Englewood, a freight yard near the city of Chicago, on April 13th, were taken to the city on May 3rd, and delivered to the connecting carrier on May 16th; that the Lake Shore & Michigan Central Railway Company encountered difficulties in moving its trains into and through the city, which were occasioned by a combination of persons, composed of switchmen of that and other railroads and others, to obstruct the movement of the trains; that there was a strike of this class of employes, which commenced on May 2nd, and continued until May 16th, which quite effectually interrupted the business of the road, that although the company employed other men, and had an adequate force to operate its trains, they were prevented by this organized opposition from proceeding with the business; that the trouble was mostly within the city, but that it also extended to the Englewood yard.

Held, that while the defendant was liable for the failure of the agencies, employed by it to carry the property, to exercise proper care and diligence, yet as the evidence given upon the trial would have authorized the jury to conclude that the company used all reasonable means and effort to move its trains, and that the delay in the time occupied in so doing was without negligence or fault on its part, it was error for the court to refuse to submit the case to the jury and to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Little v. Fargo, 43 Hun, 233.

Strike among carrier's employes does not relieve it from necessity of shipping flour consigned for transportation, unless violence from the strikers renders it impossible. Haas v. Kansas &c. R. Co., 81 Ga. 792.

No liability for delay in transportation of goods, when the same is caused by strikes accompanied with violence. L. & N. R. Co. v. Bell, 13 Ky. L. R. 393.

A carrier was excused from supplying coal cars during a strike, where it was accustomed to supply itself with coal in that region and, by reason of the strike, had to use all its cars to haul its coal down from another district. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Queen City Coal Co., 99 Ky. 217.

A carrier is not relieved by the unavoidable consequences of a strike from getting directions as to the disposition of goods from the shipper under the changed circumstances, where that is possible. Alabama &c. R. Co. v. Brichetto, 72 Miss. 891.

A contract of shipment being unconditional, the carrier was liable for a delay caused by a strike in another company. The case is otherwise where there is no express contract. Shelby v. Missouri P. R. Co., 77 Mo. App. 205.

Evidence of a strike on defendant's road is admissible to excuse defendant from transporting stock according to contract. International &c. R. Co. v. Tisdale, 74 Tex. 8.

Deterioration in a consignment of lemons when the delay was caused by mobs and strikes not chargeable to the carrier. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Levi, 76 Tex. 337.

Delay in forwarding a shipment of cattle is excused if caused by a strike on the line. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Gatewood, 79 Tex. 89.

Carrier accepting cattle with knowledge of a washout on its line, held not negligent per se nor liable for delay. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Bland. (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. Rep. 675.

VIII. Carriage of Animals.

The liability of a common carrier of animals is not, in all respects, the same as that of a carrier of inanimate property.

But the liability of a railroad company, engaged as a common carrier of animals, is not limited to the careful and safe conveyance of the car containing them.

In the absence of a special agreement, the company is responsible for any injury which can be prevented by foresight, vigilance and care, although arising from the conduct of the animals.

The carrier is not an insurer against injuries arising from the nature and propensities of animals, and which diligent care cannot prevent. As to damage arising from other causes, the liability is the same as that of a carrier of other property. Clarke v. Rochester and Syracuse R. Co., 14 N. Y. 570, aff'g judg't for pl'ffs.

From opinion.—“The plaintiffs contended for the rule that the carrier is bound to transport in safety and deliver at all events, save only the known cases in which a carrier of ordinary chattels is excused, while the defendants maintain that they are not insurers at all against the class of accidents which arise from the vitality of the freight. We are of the opinion that neither of these positions is well taken. A bale of goods or other inanimate chattel may be so stowed as that absolute safety may be attained, except in transportation by water, where the carrier usually excepts the perils of the navigation, and except in cases of inevitable accident. The rule, established from motives of policy, which charges the carrier in almost all cases, is not therefore unreasonable in its application to such property. But the carrier of animals, by a mode of conveyance opposed to their habits and instincts, has no such means of securing absolute safety. They may die of fright, or by refusing to eat, or they may, notwithstanding every precaution, destroy themselves in attempting to break away from the fastenings by which they are secured in the vehicle used to transport them, or they may kill each other. In such cases, supposing all proper care and foresight to have been exercised by the carrier, it would be unreasonable in a high degree to charge them with the loss. The reasons stated by Chief Justice Marshall, in pronouncing the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Boyce v. Anderson, (2 Peters 150) have considerable application to this case. It was there held that the carrier of slaves was not an insurer of their safety, but was only liable for ordinary neglect; and this was put mainly upon the ground that he could not have the same absolute control over them that he had over inanimate matter. Where, however, the cause of the damage for which recompense is sought is unconnected with the conduct or propensities of the animal undertaken to be carried, the ordinary responsibilities of the carrier should attach. Palmer v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, (4 Mees & Wells, 749) was the case of an action against a railway company for negligence in carrying horses, by which one was killed and others injured, but the damage was occasioned by the carriages running off the track of the road down an embankment, and the case did not turn at all on the peculiarity of the freight, but mainly on the question whether the defendants had limited their responsibility by a notice. The jury found that notice had not been given and that the defendants had been guilty of gross negligence. Mr. Baron Parke, in giving the opinion of the court, declared that the common law duty of carriers was cast upon the defendants. The precise question now before us was not discussed, but it was assumed that the law of carriers applied to the case. There is no question why it should not, in all cases of accident unconnected with the conduct of the animals. But the rule which would exempt the carrier altogether from accidents arising out of the peculiar character of the freight, irrespective of the question of negligence, would be equally unreasonable. It would relieve the carrier altogether from those necessary precautions which any person becoming the bailee, for hire, of animals is bound to exercise, and the owner, where he did not himself assume the duty of seeing to them, would be wholly at the mercy of the carrier. The nature of the case does not call for any such relaxation of the rule, and, considering the laws of carriers to be established upon considerations of sound policy, we would not depart from it, except where the reason upon which it is based wholly fails, and then no further than the cause of the exception requires.

We cannot, therefore, assent to the position of the counsel for either of the parties, in this case. The learned judge who tried this case gave to the jury the true principle of liability in such cases. Laying out of view the idea of inevitable accident, which it was not pretended had occurred, he instructed them that the defendants were responsible, unless the damage was caused by an occurrence incident to the carriage of animals in a railroad car, and which the defendants could not, by the exercise of diligence and care, have prevented. This accords with our understanding of the law."

In the transportation of living animals carriers are relieved from responsibility for such injuries as occur in consequence of the vitality of the freight, so far as such injury could not, by the exercise of diligence and care be prevented; in other respects, their responsibility in regard to stock is the same which rests upon them in regard to goods. Clark v. Rochester & Syracuse R. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 570; Bissell v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 25 id. 445, rev'g judg't for pl'ff. and new trial ordered.

Defendant contracted to transport a lot of hogs for plaintiffs from Buffalo to Albany. By the contract, in consideration of a reduced rate of freight, plaintiffs assumed the risks of injuries from heat, etc. Forty-three of the hogs died from the effects of the heat, the result of the negligence of defendant's employes in not watering and cooling the hogs by wetting. In an action to recover damages, held, that as the common law liability of carriers did not apply to live stock, but in the transportation thereof they were only liable for negligence, to give effect to the stipulation in the contract, it must be construed as exempting the defendant from injuries by heat, the result of negligence, and that therefore defendant was not liable. Cragin v. New York Central R. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 61, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

From opinion.—"The rule of the common law makes a common carrier responsible for the safe carriage and delivery of property intrusted to his care, unless he be prevented by the acts of God or of the public enemy. But this rule is not applied in its full extent to the carriage of live stock. Angell on Car. sec. 214; Clark v. The Rochester and Syracuse R. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 570; Bissell v. New York Central R. R. Co., 25 id. 442; Smith v. New Haven and Northampton R. R. Co., 12 Allen, 531. In the transportation of such stock in the absence of negligence, the carrier is relieved from responsibility for such injuries as occur in consequence of the vitality of the freight. He does not absolutely warrant live freight against the consequences of its own vitality. Animals may injure or destroy themselves or each other; they may die from fright or from starvation because they refuse to eat, or they may die from heat or cold. In all such cases the carrier is relieved from responsibility if he can show that he has provided all suitable means of transportation, and exercised that degree of care which the nature of the property requires. Therefore in this case it was not sufficient to establish the common-law liability of the defendant to show that the hogs died from heat; but it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show further, that there was some negligence or omission of duty on the part of the defendant."

The common-law liabilities of carriers attach to the carriers of animals, modified only so far as the cause of damage for which recompense is sought, is a consequence of the conduct or propensities of the animals undertaken to be carried. Mynard v. Syracuse, Binghamton & New York R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 180; rev'g 7 Hun. 399, and aff'g judg't for p'ff.

From opinion.—"The carrier is excused from liability for loss caused by inherent infirmity or tendency to decay. It has been held that a carrier is not responsible for the evaporation of liquids, nor for the diminution of molasses, caused by the oozing through vent holes necessary to prevent the bursting of barrels, (Angell on Carriers, sec. 211, and cases cited): and exemptions from liability for loss by inherent qualities of animals, rests upon the same principle. Beyond this the common-law liabilities exist against the carrier of animals the same as the carrier of other property, and the clause in the contract can, therefore, operate in many cases where negligence cannot be imputed.

In Massachusetts, in Smith v. R. R. Co., 12 Allen, 531, the court says: 'The common-law liability of a carrier for the delivery of live animals is the same as that for the delivery of merchandise. Upon undertaking their transportation, he assumes the obligation to deliver them safely against all contingencies, except such as would excuse the non-delivery of other property.'

As to leakage, breakage, etc., see Wharton on Negligence, sec. 568.

Where a carrier receives horses for transportation it becomes an insurer against all loss, and can be relieved from liability in case of loss only where the loss could be attributed to the viciousness, unruliness or restiveness of the animal and the carrier has been guilty of no contributory negligence. Giblin v. Nat. Steamship Co., 8 Misc. 22; s. c. aff'd, 152 N. Y. 633.

A horse was tied in a stall in a car, constructed of joists, one of which was placed cross wise in front of it. By a sudden stoppage of the train the horse was thrown against the joist so violently as to break it and the ropes by which it was tied and cause the horse to fall so as to break its back. The facts raised a presumption of negligence. Newman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 33 App. Div. 171.

Though a carrier ships by an earlier train than agreed and no one was present to receive them and they were returned, plaintiff was negligent in failing to care for the animals during their reshipment. Harrison v. Wier, 15 N. Y. Supp. 909.

Where a horse, whose owner had agreed to load and unload at his own risk, was unloaded by the carrier for feeding, in compliance with statute and slipped on the bridge while being reloaded, a direction to find for plaintiff, if the horse was unloaded without his consent, was error, as disregarding the question of propriety of unloading at that point and the facilities therefor. Nashville &c. R. Co. v. Parker, 123 Ala. 683.

The duty of a carrier of a dog is not discharged by giving some attention to its necessities, but the supply of food must be adequate. Southern Exp. Co. v. Ashford, 126 Ala. 591.

The gate of a receiving pen sagged and had to be lifted in closing to latch it. The shipper's agents upon driving the cattle in made no effort to raise the gate so as to properly close it. No recovery was allowed for escape of cattle as it occurred through shipper's negligence. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Law, 68 Ark. 218.

A horse, received at defendant's wharf for transportation, fell overboard. Carrier, liable as an insurer. Reed v. Wilmington &c. Co., 1 Marv. (Del.) 193.

It was held error to refuse to submit the question of negligence to the jury, where a carrier drove cattle into an unsheltered pen on a cold night after getting out an injured animal instead of returning them to the car. Cooper v. Raleigh &c. R. Co., 105 Ga. 83.

Where a mule, by kicking, caught its leg in the grating of a car and broke it, the railroad company was held free from liability on the ground that a carrier is not an insurer against the inherent defects and vices of animals. Cooper v. Raleigh &c. R. Co., 110 Ga. 659.

Carrier was not liable for damage to live stock by reason of lack of attention, where the shipper assumed that duty. Central &c. R. Co., 111 Ga. 865.

Shipper agreed to load and unload and accompany the shipment relieving carrier from damage except by gross negligence. Shipper could not complain where he did not accompany the stock which was sealed in transit. Susong v. Florida &c. R. Co., (Ga.) 41 S. E. Rep. 566.

Carrier is not bound to feed and water cattle where the contract of carriage imposes that duty upon the shipper. Seaboard &c. R. Co. v. Cauthen, (Ga.) 41 S. E. Rep. 653.

Carrier of cattle was liable for furnishing cars infected with a contagious disease. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Harris, 184 Ill. 57; s. c., 48 L. R. A. 175; aff'g s. c., 84 Ill. App. 462.

Carrier of a hog was liable for the refusal of an agent to place it where it could get sufficient air. United States Ex. Co. v. Coffman, 84 Ill. App. 491.

It was held error to charge that a carrier is liable for want of ordinary care, the true rule being that proof of injury or loss while in the possession of the carrier makes a prima facie case, which may be rebutted by evidence that it provided all suitable means of transportation and exercised that degree of care which the property required. Burke v. United States Ex. Co., 87 Ill. App. 505.

It was held gross negligence "to kick" a car violently against another containing horses. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Calumet Stock Farm, 96 Ill. App. 337; s. c. aff'd, 194 Ill. 9.

A carrier was negligent in putting latticed cattle cars, bedded with straw near a defective engine, where they were liable to be set afire by sparks from it. Parrill v. Cleveland &c. R. Co., 23 Ind. App. 638.

Carrier was liable for loss of cattle which escaped from insecure shipping pens. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Bryne, (Ind. Terr.) 49 S. W. Rep. 41.

It was for the jury to say whether carrier was negligent in carrying a horse in a car in which it had recently carried fresh lime and in exposing him to the elements during transit. Galliers v. Chicago &c. R. Co., (Iowa) 89 N. W. Rep. 1109.

A shipper who actually attempted to care for stock in transit cannot recover, where damage was owing to his neglect, though the contract compelling him to do so was invalid. Grieve v. Illinois C. R. Co., 104 Iowa, 659; Burgher v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 105 id. 335.

Common carriers transporting stock are liable as insurers for damage to the same. Kan. Pac. R. Co. v. Nichols, 9 Kan. 235.

Carrier of stock is not liable for injuries attributable to the inherent nature of the animal shipped. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Clark, 48 Kan. 321.

That the shipper accompanied his cattle and attended to their care, did not relieve a carrier from liability for bumping the cars together so violently as to throw the cattle about the cars, nor from preventing their having food or water for more than fifty hours. Atchison &c. R. Co. v. Ditmars, 3 Kan. App. 459.

Carrier is not liable for damage due to the restiveness or viciousness of animals carried. Hall v. Renfro, 3 Mete. (Ky.) 51.

Weight of cattle broke the floor of a car which was in such condition it was apparently not safe for the transportation of cattle. Burden on carrier to show injury was not caused by the break. Ohio &c. R. Co. v. Tabor, (Ky.) 32 S. W. Rep. 168; s. c., 34 L. R. A. 685; s. c. aff'd, 36 S. W. Rep. 18; s. c., 34 L. R. A. 688.

It is the duty of an initial carrier to ascertain whether a connecting carrier can complete the transit and if not to forward it by another line or notify the shipper, and it is negligent in failing to do so. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Farmer's &c. Firm, (Ky.) 52 S. W. Rep. 972.

Carrier of live stock is not an insurer. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Harned, (Ky.) 66 S. W. Rep. 25.

Horses injured in such a way as to subject them to attack of pneumonia. They all died of pneumonia. Defendant was liable. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Wathen, (Ky.) 66 S. W. Rep. 714.

Horses shipped on a special express car provided with food, water and space to rest need not be unloaded every twenty-eight hours under U. S. R. S. sec. 4388. Regan v. Adams Exp. Co., 49 La. Ann. 1579.

The carrier is not liable for refusing to delay a scheduled passenger train to unload a sick horse, where it offered to cut out the car containing the horse and leave it until the next train. Id.

Injuries to horses flowing from their own bad temper is not chargeable to carrier. Erans v. Fitchburg R. Co., 111 Mass. 142.

Carrier was negligent in refusing to unload stock for rest, food and drink, especially when the train was delayed several hours by misconnections, and they could have been attended to conveniently, where it resulted in keeping them without such necessities for more than the limit of time prescribed by U. S. R. S. sec. 4386-90. Brockway v. American Ex. Co., 168 Mass. 257.

A connecting carrier must at its peril ascertain whether it can continue the carriage of stock to their destination without violating a statute, limiting the time for keeping them loaded and it must not receive them if it has not the proper facilities for complying therewith. Hendrick v. Boston &c. R. Co., 170 Mass. 44.

Quare, as to whether live pigeons would or would not be regarded as common-law freight for express company conducting as common carrier. American Merchants &c. Ex. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

It being the custom in Michigan to send a caretaker with stock, the shipper is negligent in failing to do so. The carrier does not assume the common law liability where none is sent, nor where one is sent but fails to do his duty. Heller v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 109 Mich. 53.

Although a carrier may not limit his liability for loss by negligence, he is not answerable for loss from inherent nature of animal shipped. Boehl v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 44 Minn. 191.

A carrier is not liable to the owner of a mule whose hoof was torn off during transportation, it being shown that equipments were in good condition. L. N. &c. R. Co. v. Bigger, 66 Miss. 319.

A carrier was held liable for injury to cattle by "kicking" one car against another, under a statute making a railroad company liable for injuries resulting from that method of switching, without regard to contributory negligence. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Kerl, 77 Miss. 736.

Where different kinds of hogs were shipped in the same car as permitted by statute, the presumption arose that any loss or injury was caused by the mixed shipment and such presumption was not rebutted by showing merely a failure to comply with a statute requiring trap doors in the car, without showing that such failure caused the injury. Paddock v. Missouri P. R. Co., 155 Mo. 524.

Carrier was not negligent in failing to care for stock where the shipper had assumed the duty. Holloway v. Wabash R. Co., 62 Mo. App. 53.

Carrier was negligent in allowing ice to remain on the floor of a cattle chute, and the shipper was not contributorily negligent in not sanding it before use. Kincaid v. Kansas City &c. R. Co., 62 Mo. App. 365.

Shipper, who, having stock in excess of the capacity of the cars demanded, crowded cattle in a close box car instead of waiting for other cars, could not hold the carrier for neglect to provide suitable accommodation. Huston Bros. v. Wabash R. Co., 63 Mo. App. 671.

Carrier was liable for the insecurity of stock pens provided for stock awaiting shipment. Tracy v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 80 Mo. App. 389.

The duty of a carrier of live stock is the same as that of carriers of other goods, except that they are not insurers against the inherent natures, propensities, and habits of such animals. Cash v. Wabash R. Co., 81 Mo. App. 109.

Cattle train was delayed frequently and unnecessarily to the extent of six hours in 200 miles, and in positions where the stock was deprived of the breeze. Some of the cattle died of the heat. Held negligence on the part of the railroad company. Minter v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 82 Mo. App. 130.

That shipper was to care for stock in yards awaiting shipment and on the road, did not relieve a carrier of the care of part of the shipment detained on account of the breaking of a car in which they had been shipped. Union P. R. Co. v. Langan, 52 Neb. 105.

The responsibility for animals is that of a common carrier except as to injuries due to their peculiar character and propensities. Bamberg v. South Carolina R. Co., 9 S. C. 61.

Carrier was negligent in failing to provide facilities to enable a shipper to care for his stock and it is chargeable with knowledge of time spent on a connecting line in exceeding the statutory limit of time for its confinement without food, rest, &c. Comer v. Columbia &c. R. Co., 52 S. C. 36.

Carrier was not relieved of the duty of care in assisting the loading of cattle by a stipulation that loading should be at shipper's risk, as it thereby exempted the carrier from negligence in its assistance and so was void. Crawford v. Southern R. Co., 56 S. C. 136.

Although not insurers against injuries from inherent nature of stock intrusted to them, carriers are liable for injuries to it as if it were goods consigned. R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320.

The law does not recognize shipping condition of cattle apart from their general or ordinary condition. Felton v. Clarkson, 103 Tenn. 457.

A carrier allowed a gate to a stock pen to get out of repair. While the shipper was attempting to fasten it the stock took fright at a passing train and stampeded through it, injuring themselves and him. The carrier was held liable for injury to the stock but not the injury to the shipper. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Bigham, 90 Tex. 223; rev'g s. c., 36 S. W. Rep. 1111.

The fact that an unusual number of cattle were being shipped over a railroad at the time did not excuse the carrier for failure to provide cars for the shipment of cattle offered under a statute requiring railroad companies to furnish cars within a reasonable time after stock is offered for shipment. Davis v. Texas &c. R. Co., 91 Tex. 505.

Carrier was liable for loss by withholding cattle till payment of excessive freight. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. Rep. 225.

Carrier was liable for defective condition of receiving pens and lack of facilities therein for feeding and watering. International &c. R. Co. v. Startz, (Tex. Civ. App.) 33 S. W. Rep. 515.

That shipper was to care for stock did not relieve a carrier from liability for improper care, where, owing to a delay, it attempted to care for them, locking out the shipper. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Frost, (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. Rep. 167, 169.

It was held that a shipper could not deliver cattle half starved and famished to a carrier for a five or six hours' journey and compel the carrier to feed them en route. In determining the statutory length of time between feedings, it was presumed that they had been fed before starting; and the carrier was not negligent in refusing to hold them for feed before delivering them to a connecting carrier. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Stribling, (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. Rep. 1002.

Carrier was liable for an unreasonable delay at a switch, though the inherent propensities of the animals carried contributed to their injury. Galveston &c. R. Co. v. Herring, (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. Rep. 129.

Shipper's knowledge of the unsafe condition of the stock pen was not contributory negligence, where the carrier undertook to give immediate facility for transportation. Galveston &c. R. Co. v. Jackson, (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. Rep. 255.

Though a carrier was not negligent in permitting a horse to break out of a stock pen, it was liable for its injuries, being an insurer. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Turner, (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. Rep. 643.

A shipper undertaking the care of his cattle was not relieved of that duty by reason of an unnecessary delay by the carrier, especially where he continues to accept the benefits of his free passage. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Arnold, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 74.

A carrier assuming the duty of unloading was liable for its negligent performance. Mexican &c. R. Co. v. Savage, (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. Rep. 663.

The negligence of a carrier in allowing a mud hole in its stock pen whereby the cattle became sleek and wet, did not render it liable where the shipper overloaded the cattle to begin with and then, being in his charge, he abandoned the train while they were down. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Belcher, (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. Rep. 706.

A carrier of mares with foal was not allowed to set up the defense of inherent defect beyond what ought to have been anticipated from that cause, especially where others, not mares, were also injured. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Staton, (Tex. Civ. App.) 49 S. W. Rep. 277.

A carrier cannot relieve itself of the statutory duty to feed and water stock by tendering them to a connecting carrier which refused to accept them. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Berchfield, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 228.

In the absence of a special agreement the duty to unload, feed, water and rest cattle under U. S. R. S. sec. 4386, is the carrier's. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Avery, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 235.

That water tanks leaked upon the floor of the car during transit, was not sufficient evidence of horses having contracted catarrhal fever and pneumonia by reason of the carrier's negligence. Weed v. International &c. R. Co., 21 Tex. Civ. App. 689.

Shipper loaded cattle and horses into the same car; the cattle were unloaded into "southern pens" and thus exposed to Texas fever by the initial carrier, on account of which the connecting carrier refused to take them, though it agreed to take the horses. Shipper could not recover for the delay as to the horses, when he refused to allow one to be taken without the other. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Wells, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 255.

It is a carrier's duty to furnish stock pens that are sufficient to accommodate ordinary shipments. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Fambrough, (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. Rep. 188.

Cattle injured each other while the train was standing, but it was not shown that it occurred by reason of an unusual delay in standing. The carrier, held free from liability. Texas &c. R. Co. v. Fambrough, supra.

Carrier was liable for refusal without excuse to allow shipper to water and feed his cattle. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Leibold, (Tex. Civ. App.) 55 S. W. Rep. 368.

Shipper complained of negligent handling of his cattle. It was error to charge that he could not recover if defendant used due care and the injury was by reason of weakness in the stock. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Dickens, (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. Rep. 124.

Failure to furnish cattle cars for eight days after time agreed upon, was unreasonable and the carrier was responsible for "shrinkage." Texas &c. R. Co. v. Jones, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 551.

Shipper under contract to load and unload at his own risk was not barred from recovery for damage from overloading cars, where the carrier failed to furnish enough cars and the shipper several times requested before and during the transit that the stock be reloaded. International &c. R. Co. v. Pool, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 575.

Shipper's negligence in overloading cattle did not preclude his recovery for injuries which were the direct result of handling of the cars and unnecessary delay in transportation. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Chittim, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

Carrier is bound to use such care, prudence and caution in transportation of horses as "an ordinarily careful, prudent and cautious man would have exercised under like circumstances." Texas &c. R. Co. v. Tribble, (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 890.

Horses are included within a statute requiring the unloading of "cattle" to feed, water, rest, etc. "Other accidental causes" in U. S. R. S. section 4386 means inevitable accident causes, and not results traceable to negligence of the carrier. Chesapeake &c. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank, 92 Va. 495.

That the shipper was to water and feed and that his drover receives free passage for the purpose did not relieve the carrier from the duty, under U. S. R. S. sec. 4386, to unload, feeding upon the cars being impossible. Burns v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 104 Wis. 646.

Negligence is not imputable to a carrier from the mere fact that an unusual number of cattle died in transit to Europe, from no apparent cause, as against the fact that inspectors pronounced the accommodations and ventilation sufficient. Montgomery v. Furness, 56 Fed. Rep. 268.

A carrier of live stock was not liable for failure to feed, etc., where shipper assumed that duty and failed to perform it. The Oranmore, 92 Fed. Rep. 396; aff'g s. c., 24 Fed. Rep. 922.

Yards, constructed to facilitate loading and unloading, were used by a shipper as a place of detention awaiting shipment. The carrier was not held to the duty of a carrier, but only for ordinary care. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Byrne, 100 Fed. Rep. 359.

IX. Perishable Goods.

A carrier does not insure against the destruction of perishable goods, even though the decay of the same was hastened by a delay through stress of weather, in the absence of negligence. Wharton on Negligence, sec. 567; Story on Bailments, sec. 492a; Brig Collinberg, 1 Black, 156; Clark v. Barnard, 12 How. (U. S.) 292; Powell v. Mills, 37 Miss. 691.

Property accepted as perishable should be forwarded in the first train, unless the previous accumulation of the same kind of freight prevented such immediate action. Receipting for freight in good order does not conclude owner. Tierney v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 10 Hun, 568.

A carrier was not liable for the freezing of plants delayed during transportation as the delay was not the proximate cause thereof. Siebrecht v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 21 Misc. 615; aff'g s. c., 20 id. 730.

Railroad by which orange trees were shipped, which runs through a warm section, shipped them without notice by a northern route because of the impassable condition of its own road. It was held liable for damage to the plants by cold. Pierce v. Southern P. Co., 120 Cal. 156.

Fruit was shipped in old cars necessitating their transfer by the connecting carrier, but, having no ventilator cars, they were transferred to an ordinary box car and thereby damaged. Consignee refused to accept them. He was not warranted in refusing to receive them at all, instead of accepting them and holding the carrier for the difference in value caused by its act. Corso v. New Orleans &c. R. Co., 48 La. Ann. 1286.

A carrier of goods did not fulfill his duty of protecting perishable goods by simply following the custom in vicinity under similar circumstances. Hinton v. Eastern R. Co., 72 Minn. 339.

Where consignors directed vent in car to be left open during season when freezing is liable to occur, they cannot complain of loss caused thereby. Gillett v. Missouri &c. R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App.) 68 S. W. Rep. 61.

Shipper of apples, knowing of the lack of facility for ventilation in the cars, assumed the risk of their decay. Densmore Commission Co. v. Duluth &c. R. Co., 101 Wis. 563.

It was negligence to allow strawberries to remain without refilling ice-boxes for seven hours, where a full ice box was necessary for proper refrigeration. Lamb v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 101 Wis. 138.

X. Inherent Defects—Undisclosed Dangers in Goods.

Common carriers of goods do not insure against injury to goods arising from inherent defects or undisclosed dangers or destructive quality. Wharton on Negligence, secs. 563, 564.

Citing Blower v. R. R., L. R. 7 C. P. 662, and the cases there cited; Story on Bailments, sec. 492a; Smith's Mercantile Law, (8th ed.) 354. See, also, Rohl v. Parr, 1 Esp. 445; Hunter v. Potts, 4 Camp. 403; Rixford v. Smith, 52 N. H. 355; Ship Invincible, 3 Sawyer, 176.

Carrier was not liable for the bursting of a hogshead of molasses by reason of the fermentation resulting from natural causes. Faucher v. Wilson, 68 N. H. 338; s. c., 39 L. R. A. 431.

Where carriers undertake the transportation of articles which they know or should know to be dangerous to property or health, they assume the risk of their proper handling. Rouee v. Youard, 1 Kan. App. 270.

XI. Inevitable Accident and Vis Major

Acts of God herein termed "inevitable accident," or Vis Major will excuse safe carriage and delivery.

(a) INEVITABLE ACCIDENT.

In an action for negligent failure to deliver goods by water, a carrier may show that navigation was closed by the weather. The question is when navigation did actually close and not when it usually closes, and evidence of latter is inadmissible. McCotter v. Hooker, 8 N. Y. 497.

Destruction by an accidental fire, not caused by lightning, is not the act of God, so as to excuse a carrier, although the proximate cause of the burning of the goods in his charge was a sudden gust of wind diverting the course of a distant fire so as to drive the flames in the direction of and upon them.

There was no evidence in this case to show how the fire, by which the property in question was destroyed, originated. The presumption, therefore, was that it arose from some act of man. Angell on Carriers, sec. 156. A loss arising from an accidental fire, or conflagration of a city, without any default whatever on the part of the carrier, it is well settled, furnishes no excuse for the carrier, for it does not fall within the exception. 2 Kent's Com. 602; Story on Bailments, sees. 507, 511, 528; Hyde v. Trent Nav. Co., 5 T. R. 389; Gatliff v. Bourne, 4 Bing. N. C. 314; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 234; Miller v. Steam Navigation Co., 10 N. Y. 437.

Although an act of God makes precise performance impossible, yet, if it can be substantially carried out, it must be done.

A carrier's agreement to transport passengers between two points by a particular boat is incidental. If that boat be stayed by act of God, the carrier should use the diligence of a prudent and careful man in his own business in procuring another. Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217; overruling contrary doctrine in Briggs v. Vanderbilt, 19 Barb. 222; Bonsteel v. The Same, 21 id. 26.

“By the act of God” is meant something which operates without any act of interference from man. A steamboat came in contact with the mast of a sloop which had been sunk two days before, and was visible. The squall which sunk the sloop was not the proximate cause of the accident. Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115.

From opinion.—“The expressions ‘act of God’ and ‘inevitable accident’ have sometimes been used in a similar sense, and as equivalent terms. But there is a distinction. That may be an ‘inevitable accident’ which no foresight or precaution of the carrier could prevent; but the phrase ‘act of God’ denotes natural accidents that could not happen by the intervention of man—as storms, lightning, and tempest. The expression excludes all human agency. In the case of the Trent Proprietors v. Wood (4 Douglass, 287), Lord Mansfield said: ‘The general principle is clear. The act of God is natural necessity—as winds and storms—which arises from natural causes, and is distinct from inevitable accident.’ The same judge, in Forward v. Pittard (1 Term Rep. 27), defined the ‘act of God,’ to be something in opposition to the act of man—adding ‘that the law presumes against the carrier, unless he shows it was done by such an act as could not happen by the intervention of man—as storms, lightning and tempest.’” * * *

“To excuse the carrier the act of God must be the sole and immediate cause of the loss. That it is the remote cause is not enough. This is illustrated in the case of Smith v. Shepherd reported in Abbott on Shipping (part 3, ch. 4, sec. 1); and McArthur v. Sears (21 Wend. 190.) In Smith v. Shepherd the vessel was lost by striking a floating mast which had been sunk by getting on a bank that had suddenly and unexpectedly been made dangerous by an extraordinary flood. Coming in contact with the mast attached to the sunken ship, the defendant's vessel was forced by it upon the bank, altered suddenly by the flood, and was wrecked. The flood which changed the bank was the ultimate occasion of the misfortune; but it was held to be too remote. The vessel had not been forced on the bank by winds or other extraordinary violence of nature, or without human interference. The immediate cause of the loss was the coming in collision with a floating mast which some person had attached to the sunken vessel. In McArthur v. Sears, the vessel was lost in attempting to enter port by mistaking a light on board of a steamer for one of two beacon lights of the port. One of the beacon lights, through some neglect, was not burning, and the light on board of the wrecked steamer was easily mistaken for it. It was a dark night, the snow was falling, and there was a considerable wind. The mistake occasioned the loss of the vessel without any fault of her master or crew, yet it was held that the carrier was not excused.”

It was charged that tug boats became loosed and floated against the plaintiff's boat and injured it. It was proper to charge that the defendant was only liable for the negligence, and not at all, if ice forced the boats away in spite of suitable care. There was no claim that defendant was a common carrier, as it was employed to tow plaintiff's boat. Carpenter v. Eastern Trans. Co., 11 N. Y. 514.

As to delay in delivery the carrier is responsible only for ordinary care. Accident or misfortune will excuse delay, though it is not inevitable. Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. 215.

Damage to oranges delayed in transportation by an unprecedented flood not attributable to the carrier. Norris v. Savannah &c. R. Co., 23 Fla. 182.

Extraordinary snow storm will excuse delay in transporting stock. Pruitt v. Hannibal &c. R. Co., 62 Mo. 527.

High water, when the same is not shown to be unanticipated is not an act of God, and delay in transporting trees caused thereby is chargeable to the carrier. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552.

A snow and rain storm severe enough to block a train is an act of God, and no liability attaches for the death of hogs killed thereby. Black v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 30 Neb. 197.

Stock delayed by snow storm and in part killed or injured by the cold, may be recovered for. Feinberg v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 52 N. J. L. 451.

Live stock: no liability for delay from extraordinary snow storm. Ritz v. Penn. R. Co., 3 Phila. 82.

Wagon placed on a platform for loading was blown over by a whirlwind, sudden, severe and unprecedented. Carrier was not liable for delay in shipment resulting therefrom. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Compton, (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. Rep. 220.

An extraordinary rainfall or flood, unless unprecedented, was held to be within dangers which a carrier must provide against. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Davidson, (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. Rep. 278.

Carrier was held not liable for loss, by an unprecedented storm, of goods stored in a reasonably safe place, prompt delivery of which was delayed by bad weather. International &c. R. Co. v. Bergman, (Tex. Civ. App.) 64 S. W. Rep. 999.

Fact that carrier through delay was still in possession of the goods was held not to make it liable for conversion where loss occurred by an unusual storm. Gulf &c. R. Co. v. Darby, (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. Rep. 129.

Damage to a cargo of grain by water flowing in through a hole in vessel's side made by breaking away of cap from one of the bilge-pump holes, is not damage caused by peril of the sea, and is chargeable to the owner of the vessel. The Edwin I. Morrison, 153 U. S. 199.

(b) VIS MAJOR.

The carrier is not liable if, without his fault, goods be taken from him or injured by an irresistible force, as by a public enemy or governmental authorities. Hubbard v. Harnden's Ex. Co., 10 R. I. 244; Nashville &c. R. Co. v. Estes, 7 Heisk. 622; Wharton on Negligence, sec. 560.

That property was taken under legal process was no defense, where the consignee or his pledgee had not been notified. Spiegel v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co., 26 Misc. 414.

This rule does not apply to goods stolen. Schieffelin v. Harvey, 6 Johns. 170.

But if goods are delivered on mere presentation of a telegram from the sheriff, liability attaches, although, thereafter, sheriff appears with actual attachment.

The measure of recovery against a carrier for the loss of money delivered to it is the value named in the receipt or bill of lading. Scammon v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 84 Cal. 311.

A carrier is not liable where goods are taken from his possession by legal process. Savannah & C. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 48 Ga. 432.

If bailee uses due diligence to escape or repel attack of public enemy it is a defense that goods were taken from him. Watkins v. Roberts, 28 Ind. 167.

Riots along carrier's line excused delay in transporting hogs. Bartlett v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co., 94 Ind. 281.

Seizure under legal process was a defense in a suit for failure to deliver, although the owner and consignee was not the attachment defendant. Indiana & C. R. Co. v. Doremeyer, 20 Ind. App. 605.

Seizure by a game warden was no defense, where he did not have even apparent authority. Merriman v. Great Northern Ex. Co., 63 Minn. 543.

Carrier must show that process under which goods were seized was valid on its face and must give notice of the proceedings to the shipper. Merz v. Chicago & C. R. Co., (Minn.) 90 N. W. Rep. 7.

Refusal to deliver to the owner and consignee goods attached as the property of the consignor, on the ground that they were in the custody of the law, was held not to constitute a conversion of them. Hett v. Boston & C. R. Co., 69 N. H. 139.

A carrier is not liable for goods seized under legal process against the owner. Jewett v. Olsen, 18 Or. 419.

Goods in a carrier's possession as a warehouseman were seized under process as the property of the consignee, and, while in the custody of the law, were stolen. Consignor subsequently proved ownership and demanded the goods. He was allowed to recover only for the goods the carrier refused to deliver which were not stolen. Frank v. Central R. Co., 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 129.

The seizure of goods in the hands of a carrier for non-payment of duties by the Confederate Government, of which the consignee had notice, was held an act of the public enemy relieving the carrier. Hubbard v. Harnden Ex. Co., 10 R. I. 244.

The Confederate army was not regarded as a public enemy in some courts. Nashville &c. R. R. Co. v. Estes, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 622; Weakley v. Pearce, 5 id. 401.

A carrier of goods is liable to the consignee for goods stopped in transit by the seller if the right of stoppage did not exist at the time. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195.

(c). CONCURRING NEGLIGENCE OF CARRIER.

If carrier's negligence contribute to the injury, doctrine of inevitable accident and vis major does not apply.

A common carrier, to exempt himself from liability for injuries happening to goods while he is engaged in transporting them for hire, must show that he was free from fault at the time the injury or damage occurred, and that no act or neglect of his concurred in or contributed to the injury.

If he has departed from the line of duty, and has violated his contract, and, while thus in fault, and in consequence of that fault, the goods are injured by an act of God, which would not otherwise have produced the injury, then the carrier is not protected. Michaels v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 564; Read v. Spaulding, id. 630.

From opinion.—"What is precisely meant by the expression, 'act of God,' as used in the case of carriers, has undergone discussion, but it is agreed that the notion of exception is those losses and injuries occasioned exclusively by natural causes, such as could not be prevented by human care, skill and foresight. All the cases agree in requiring the entire exclusion of human agency from the cause of the injury or loss. If the loss or injury happen in any way through the agency of man, it cannot be considered the act of God; nor even if the act or negligence of man contributes to bring or leave the goods of the carrier under the operation of natural causes that work their injury, is he excused. In short, to excuse the carrier the 'act of God,' or vis divina, must be the sole and immediate cause of the injury. If there be any co-operation of man, or any admixture of human means, the injury is not, in a legal sense, the act of God. McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. 190; Merritt v. Earle, 31 Barb. 38; affirmed in this court; Smith v. Shepherd, cited in Abbott on Shipping; The Trent Navigation Co. v. Wood, 3 Esp. R. 127; Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term. R. 27; Campbell v. Moore, 1 Harp. Law Rep. 468; McHenry v. Railroad Co., 4 Harrington R. 448; Sierdett v. Hale, 4 Bing. R. 607; New Brunswick St. Boat Company v. Tiers, 4 Zabriskie, 697; Edwards on Bailments, 454; Angell on Carriers, sec. 156."

When goods were delayed by negligence at terminus, before delivery to next carrier, and then injured by act of God, the first carrier was liable. Mistake in name of connecting carrier corrected, and first carrier agreed to send them on but was negligent in doing so. Dennison v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 3 Lansing 265.

If the act of God intervene to injure goods, while common carrier is himself in default, or by his negligent delay, carrier is liable. Heyl v. Inman S. Line, 14 Hun, 564.

A common carrier is bound to exercise ordinary care in the shipment and transportation of fruit or other perishable property.

Plaintiffs delivered a quantity of lemons to defendant for transportation, and tendered a shipping receipt stamped with the words "refrigerator car," which words were erased by defendant's agent, who stamped on the receipt the words "not to be loaded in refrigerator car." The lemons were shipped in an ordinary box car, although the temperature was below freezing point, and they became frozen and deteriorated in value. Held, that the fact that the agent erased the words "refrigerator car" did not operate to exempt the defendant from liability for loss occasioned by its own negligence. Tucker v. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 10 Misc. 35. On appeal the judgment was reversed on the ground that, as the plaintiff had selected the time of shipment, the defendant was not chargeable with negligence, because it failed to store the goods till the weather was more favorable. Id. 11 Misc. 366.

Carrier liable for freezing of potatoes if diligence would have prevented it. Wing v. N. Y. & C. R. Co., 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 235.

By reason of customary course being frozen up another was taken, and cotton shipped was lost on the voyage; carrier was liable. Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410.

Loss of goods by an unprecedented flood does not excuse the carrier when, but for his negligent delay, the goods would have been removed by consignor before the time of said flood. Richmond & C. R. Co. v. Benson, 86 Ga. 203.

The jury decided the question of defendant's negligence where a carload of wheat was destroyed by floods while standing on siding of defendant's track. Balt. & C. R. Co. v. Keedy, 15 Md. 320.

If a carrier contracts to deliver apples to another carrier by a certain day so as to insure their not freezing, he is liable to the shipper if he fails to deliver them as stipulated and they freeze on the second carrier's hands. For v. Boston & C. R. Co., 148 Mass. 220.

Lameness of a canal horse causing a delay that subjected goods to loss by flood, does not render carrier liable. Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. St. 111.

The fact of a washout on defendant's road is no defense to an action for damages where the carrier had contracted to receive cattle on May 19th, but did not take them until May 23d. Gulf & C. R. Co. v. McCorquodale, 11 Tex. 41.

Failure to send tobacco by one train rather than another does not make carrier liable for its loss in a freshet. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 116.

Ordinary negligence renders carrier liable when goods are taken by public enemy. Holladay v. Kennard, 12 Wall. 254.

Where the standing of a vessel is due to the negligence in not taking safe courses, it is liable for loss of goods. Liverpool &c. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397.

Damage to a cargo caused by a tidal wave is not chargeable to carrier; but if he refuse to deliver it to the owner and damage occur through want of proper drying, he is responsible for such damage. Pearce v. The Thomas Newton, 41 Fed. Rep. 106.

Delay in transporting a carload of potatoes so that they froze, when they otherwise would not have done so renders carrier liable. Blodgett v. Abbot, 12 Wis. 516.

XII. Limitation of Liability.*

(a) VALIDITY AND CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS LIMITING LIABILITY.

1. CARRIER OF GOODS, P. 237.

2. CARRIER OF PASSENGERS, P. 259.

A common carrier may usually by contract, but not by notice, exempt himself from his liability as an insurer, and in several, but not the majority of the states, he may by specific and unequivocal agreement therefor also exempt himself from liability for injury caused by negligence; and there is, even in some states not allowing this exemption, a disposition to permit the shipper and carrier to modify the latter's liability even in respect to injuries arising from negligence, especially as to the amount to be paid in case of liability, loading, etc.

1. CARRIER OF GOODS.

A shipping contract will not exempt a carrier from his own negligence, unless the intent is so plainly and distinctly expressed, that it cannot be misunderstood; and the exemption will not be inferred from the general words. The words "damage occasioned by delays from any cause or from change of the weather" do not include shipper's negligence. Nicholas v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 379; 4 Hun, 327.

A carrier may, by express contract, restrict his common law liability. It is so understood in England (Allevyn v. 93; 1 Vent. 190, 238; Peake's N. P. C. 150; 4 Burr. 2301; 1 Starkie's R. 186; 2 Taunt. 211; 8 Mees.

& Welsby 443; 4 Co. 84), and in Pennsylvania (16 Penn. R. 67; 5 Rawle 179; 6 Watts. & Serg. 495). In other states, where the question has arisen whether notice would excuse the liability of the carrier, it seems to have been taken for granted that a special acceptance would do so; and in N. J. Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank (6 How. 382), it was so held by the supreme court of the United States. For the concurrent opinions of elementary writers in favor of this doctrine, see, Story on Bail, sec. 549; Chitty on Cont. 152; 2 Kent. Com. 606; Angell on Carriers, secs. 59, 220, 221. Dorr v. N. J. Steam Navigation Co., 11 N. Y. 492.*

Mynard v. S. & B. & N. Y. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 180.

A stipulation that the towing of boats should be "at the risk of the master and owners" of such boats, covers the perils of navigation, but not the gross negligence of servants of the owner of the towing boat. Stipulation in a contract to exempt from gross negligence must be specific and distinct. It will not be implied from a clause containing a general expression which might otherwise be so construed. Wells v. Steam Navigation Co., 8 N. Y. 375.

Alexander v. Green, 7 Hill 544, approved.

Release "from any act, neglect or default of the pilot, master or mariners" does not relieve from gross negligence of mate, as where the mate delivered goods to unauthorized carman. Guillaume v. The Hamburgh & Am. P. Co., 42 N. Y. 212.

See Spinette v. Atlas S. Co., 14 Hun. 110.

A clause in a bill of lading releasing the carrier "from damage or loss to any article from or by fire" does not cover loss from such cause occasioned by the defendant's negligence. Steinweg v. Erie Railway Co., 43 N. Y. 123.

Citing York v. Central R. Co., 3 Wallace (U. S.) 107.

Release from loss, injury, damages, and other contingencies in loading, unloading, conveyance, and otherwise, or from failure by any particular train, or delivery, at any particular time, etc., does not cover switching cattle on a side track and leaving there for three days, where they could not be unloaded, fed or watered, which was not negligence, but an abandonment of effort to carry. Keeney v. G. T. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 525.

*Note Chap. 565, L. N. Y. 1890. "Sec. 13. Rights and liabilities as common carriers. Every railroad corporation doing business in this state shall be a common carrier. Any one of two or more corporations owning or operating connecting roads, within this state, or partly within and partly without the state shall be liable as a common carrier, for the transportation of passengers or delivery of freight received by it to be transported to any place on the line of a connecting road; and if it shall become liable to pay any sum by reason of the neglect or misconduct of any other corporation it may collect the same of the corporation by reason, of whose neglect or misconduct it became so liable."

A hidden stump, a recent obstruction in the Hudson river, causing an obstruction, is within the clause "dangers of the sea." Redpath v. Vaughan, 48 N. Y. 655.

An assumption by the shipper of the risk of injury from the heat covers the risk of such injury through the defendant's negligence. As the common law liability of carriers did not apply to live stock, but as they were only liable for negligence, the exemption must be deemed to relate to such negligence.

Defendant's servants neglected to water and cool hogs by wetting while in transit. Cragin v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 61.

Plaintiff shipped goods of the value of about $1,500, receiving a receipt therefor containing this clause: "The Adams Express Company are not to be held liable or responsible for the property herein mentioned for any loss or damage arising from the dangers of railroad, ocean, steam or river navigation, leakage, fire, or from any cause whatever, unless specially insured by them and so specified in this receipt; which insurance shall constitute the limits of the liability of the Adams Express Company in any event; and if the value of the property above described is not stated by the shipper, the holder hereof will not demand of the Adams Express Company a sum exceeding fifty dollars for the loss, or detention or damage to the property." No value was fixed by plaintiffs at the time. Held, that the first portion of the clause excluded all liability resulting from damages enumerated, save in the case of insurance; that the latter part related to other grounds of claim not included in the first, but that it did not include losses occurring through defendant's negligence; and to such losses the fifty dollars' limitation did not apply. Maguin v. Dinsmore, 56 N. Y. 168.

A release from negligence of pilot or mariners relates to the time of the voyage, and not to the time after the goods are unloaded and awaiting delivery. The agreement of the consignee to take them from alongside, or that the carrier might land at the consignee's risk, would not relieve the defendant from negligence, and the consignee was entitled to notice of arrival and a reasonable time for the removal of the goods. Gleadell v. Thompson, 56 N. Y. 194.

A stipulation that the carrier should not be liable for any loss of damage of any box, etc., for over fifty dollars, unless the just and true value be given, does not cover loss from negligence.

A receipt that the company would not be liable for loss or damage unless claim therefor was made in writing "within thirty days from the accruing of the cause of action," was not in the nature of a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover, as it assumes the existence of a cause of action which has accrued, but was in the nature of a limitation and could not be availed of upon trial unless set up in the answer. Quare as to whether such time was reasonable. See Adams Express Company v. Reagan, 29 Ind. 21; Southern Express Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542; 6 Lansing. 319; aff'g 63 Barb. 349.*

A carrier may exempt itself from liability from negligence, but the language for that purpose must be unequivocal; so a release from any damages or injury "from whatsoever cause arising," does not include carrier's negligence. Myard v. S. & B. & N. Y. R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 180; rev'g 1 Hun. 399, and distinguishing Cragin v. N. Y. Central R. Co. 51 N. Y. 61; and citing, N. J. Steam. & Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. U. S. Rep. 344; Alexander v. Greene, 7 Hill, 533; Wells v. Steam Nav. Co., 8 N. Y. 315; Steinweg v. Erie R. Co., 43 id. 123.

However broad the contract of release, if it does not specifically and in express terms release the carrier from his own negligence, there is no release, if the general words may operate without including negligence. Release from injuries "caused by the burning of hay, straw or other feeding material" does not cover burning through the defendant's negligence. Holsapple v. R. W. & O. R. R. Co., 86 N. Y. 275.

Distinguishing Cragin v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 51 N. Y. 61, and citing Angell on Carriers, 214; Pratt v. Ogdensburgh. & c. R. R. Co., 102 Mass. 557; Powell v. Penn. R. R. Co., 32 Penn. 414.

The plaintiff shipped various lots of cotton for transportation from Memphis to Liverpool via Jersey City, under contracts with dispatch companies of whose route the defendant's road formed a part, and a portion of the cotton was burned in its freight-house in Jersey City. The bill of lading stipulated that none of the companies and their connections should be liable for loss by fire in transit, in deposit, or places of trans-shipment, depots, &c. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover unless he showed that the fire came from the defendant's negligence, which was not shown. Whitworth v. Erie Railway Co., 87 N. Y. 413.

Lamb v. Camden, &c. R. Co., 46 N. Y. 271; Caldwell v. N. J. S. Co., 47 id. 282; Cochran v. Dinsmore, 49 id. 252.

The bills of lading contained a general exemption from liability for loss by fire, and the loss having occurred from this cause, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, in order to avoid the effect of the exemption, to show that the fire was the result of the defendant's negligence, or that the loss resulted from some breach of the defendant's duty. The burden was upon the plaintiff to show facts taking the case out of the operation of the exemption clause. (Lamb v. Camden & Amboy R. R. Co., 46 N. Y. 271; Caldwell v. N. J. Steamboat Co., 47 id. 282; Cochran v. Dinsmore, 49 id. 252.) Whitworth v. Erie Railway Co., 87 id. N. Y. 419.

A stipulation that the carrier shall not be liable while the goods are at "any of their stations awaiting delivery," and that they must be removed "during business hours" means "awaiting delivery" after notice of arrival and adequate time for delivery. The goods arrived too late for removal on Saturday and were removed on Monday, and meanwhile injured by a mob. Defendant was liable as carrier. Liability remained until either the property transported was actually delivered at its destination, or until notice was given to the consignee and the expiration of a reasonable time for its removal. Fenner v. B. & State Line R. R. Co., 44 N. Y. 511; 4 Am. Rep. 709; Zinn v. N. J. Steamboat Co., 49 N. Y. 442; 10 Am. Rep. 402; McAndrew v. Whitlock, 52 N. Y. 40; 11 Am. Rep. 657; Gleadell v. Thomson, 56 N. Y. 194. Had he not been liable as carrier he would have been responsible as warehouseman for negligence. McKinney v. Jewett, Receiver, 90 N. Y. 267; 24 Hun, 19.

A shipper was released from the negligence of the carrier's servants for insecurity of the car. A defective car was used, although it did not appear but that other sound cars were provided, so that injury might have been caused by defendant's servants. Held, that no proof of defendant's negligence was proven and that injury was from negligence of the carrier's servants, and plaintiff did not recover. Wilson v. N. Y. C. &c. R. R. Co., 97 N. Y. 87; 27 Hun, 149.

Proof of usage was held not to contradict the bill of lading, but simply to explain it. (Hostetter v. Troy, 11 Fed. Rep. 181; Lowery v. Russell, 8 Pick. 360; Phillips on Ins. 5th ed. 980.)

parties, and their contracts are supposed to be made with reference to it. Robertson v. N. S. Co., 139 N. Y. 416.

A stipulation that the carrier shall not be liable for loss to an amount greater than $50, unless expressed therein, or specially insured, was held not to apply to a negligent failure to stop goods in transitu at the order of shipper. Rosenthal v. Weir, 170 N. Y. 149; aff'g s. c., 54 App. Div. 275.

Limitation of liability to a certain amount for loss and damage does not cover damages for negligence for failure to deliver in time. It was also held (1), that, as the action was for negligence in delivering, and not for loss of or damage to the goods, the amount of the recovery was not limited by the stipulation in the receipt; (2), that, as it appeared that the goods had no market value at Chicago, the place of manufacture was properly resorted to for the purpose of determining their value. Froman v. Am. Merchants' Union Ex. Co., 2 Hun. 512.

Under contract to carry meat in refrigerator of steamboat, the plaintiff shipped beef and mutton, both of which were put in the refrigerator although the mutton was omitted from the bill of lading. Defendant liable to carry both safely. Stipulation relieving from decay of property does not refer to decay from the defendant's negligent acts. When the propeller shaft broke it was properly left to the jury to say whether the captain of the boat was negligent or reckless in continuing the voyage instead of turning back, whereby the meat was destroyed. Sherman v. Inman S. Line, 26 Hun. 107.

Stipulation in bill of lading relieving defendant for delays of goods to be carried beyond its route will not relieve from delays caused by negligence of its own servants, nor from failure to deliver goods to connecting carrier. It is the duty of the first carrier to use reasonable diligence to discover facilities for forwarding.

On the question of such negligence evidence, showing that the custom was to ship to an intermediate port the goods received for the port to which those in question were destined, and that these goods might have been shipped at an earlier date to this intermediate port, is admissible. No presumption to carry beyond its own route arose from the consignment address put upon the goods before their shipment at Buffalo. (Root v. G. W. R. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 524; Babcock v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 49 id. 491; Rawson v. Holland, 59 id. 611.) McKay v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 50 Hun. 562.

Bill of lading containing exemptions from loss by sweating, rain, spray, or inherent deterioration, or damage done while not actually in defendant's possession, held valid. Robertson v. National S. S. Co., 1 App. Div. 61.

Under a stipulation that glass should be at shipper's risk, and relieving carrier from loss by breakage or improper package, carrier was not liable where a demijohn was negligently placed in a claret case without anything to indicate its contents. Morris v. Wier, 20 Misc. 586.

See, also, Toy v. Long Island R. Co., 26 Misc. 792.

Under a restriction of liability to losses from gross negligence, proof that a violin case strong enough for ordinary traveling, without packing was additionally crated and was injured, was held prima facie evidence of gross negligence. Campe v. Weir, 28 Misc. 243.

A stipulation against liability above a specified amount, or in any event, above the true value of the article injured, did not operate to relieve the carrier from liability for negligence. Marquis v. Wood, 29 Misc. 590.

Exemption from liability for "loss or breakage" was held not an exemption from liability for negligence. Hutkoff v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 29 Misc. Rep. 170.

Exemption from liability for loss of goods by breakage not allowed unless such loss was due to other causes than carrier's negligence. Steele v. Townsend, 37 Ala. 247.

Carrier cannot by special agreement, limit his liability for loss of luggage of free passenger from negligence, even as to value. Mobile &c. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 41 Ala. 486.

Carrier of goods may limit liability as common carrier but not that for loss from negligence. South &c. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606.

Under special contract carrier will not be liable for damage to stock from their inherent nature; reduced rates in consideration of certain value agreed upon will determine carrier's limit of liability. South &c. R. Co. v. Henlein, 52 Ala. 606.

A limitation to twenty dollars per barrel of alcohol in consideration of reduced rates will not be enforced, when loss of the same is due to carrier's want of care, skill or diligence. Ala. &c. R. Co. v. Little, 71 Ala. 611.

Contract relieving carrier from liability for all but "gross or wanton negligence," will not be enforced. Ala. &c. R. Co. v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 343.

Where limitation as to value of furniture was in consideration of a reduced rate of freight, such limitation is a valid release from carrier's liability for negligence. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Sherrod, 84 Ala. 178.

Carrier, on valid consideration, may curtail its liability except for negligence. Ullman v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 112 Wis. 150, 168.

2. CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

Unless there be an express agreement exempting it, the carrier of passengers, with or without compensation, is liable for negligence; yet, the compensation may have bearing on the degree of negligence, which will make the carrier liable. Plaintiff was a mail agent and claimed that contract made with the government inured to his benefit, whereby the defendant became obligated to carry him for a consideration; the court held otherwise; yet, although a gratuitous passenger, the carrier owed him such care at least as would be due from a gratuitous bailee, and would be liable for culpable neglect. Nolton v. Western R. Co., 15 N. Y. 444, overruling demurrer to complaint.

Notwithstanding the disability attached to general notices, not only posted notices, but also the statement on the ticket were regarded as important as against the carrier in Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306.

The contract between the defendant and a gratuitous passenger, exempting the defendant from liability for negligence slight or gross, is valid. The plaintiff paid no fare, but was carried under a free ticket, on which was printed the following words: "The person accepting this free ticket assumes all risks of accidents, and expressly agrees, that the company shall not be liable under any circumstances, whether of negligence of their agents or otherwise, for any injury to the person, or for any loss or injury to the property of the passenger using this ticket." Wells v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 181, aff'g judg't for pl'ff. Ulrich v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 108 id. 80.

From opinion.—"It is immaterial whether the negligence of the agents be slight or gross. The supposed distinction between different degrees of negligence, in respect to the liability of common carriers, is discarded as illusory and impracticable. See Steamboat New World v. King, 16 How. 474; Wilson v. Brett, 11 Mees. & Wels. 113; Hintin v. Dibbin, 2 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 646, 661; Blyth v. Water Works, 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 506; s. c., 11 Exch. 781; Angell on Carriers (3d ed.), secs. 22, 23."

A railroad company cannot exempt itself from liability to a passenger for an injury resulting from its own misconduct or recklessness, but as to a gratuitous passenger it may stipulate for exemption on account of even the gross negligence of its servants others than the board of directors and managers representing the company, for general purposes. As to the case of a trackmaster using rotten material on track. (Quere.)

Passenger had a pass with a condition. "NOTICE.—The person accepting this free ticket assumes all risks of accidents, and expressly agrees that the company shall not be liable, under any circumstances whether of negligence by their agents or otherwise, for any injury to the person, or for any loss or injury to the property of the passenger using this ticket. * * * Had the passenger been riding on the pass alone the carrier would be obliged to carry him carefully, but the exemption on pass relieved carrier from this responsibility. Perkins v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 196, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

As to who is a passenger, see also "Carriers of Passengers," post p. 368.

The owner of cattle was transported on a railroad under contract that, "Persons riding free to take charge of stock do so at their own risk of personal injury from whatever cause."

It seems that the owner of cattle, transported for hire on a railroad, and who goes along in charge of them, under a contract that "the persons riding free to take charge of the stock do so at their own risk of personal injury from whatever cause," is not to be regarded as a gratuitous passenger.

The owner was injured by the gross negligence of an agent of the carrier in using an unfit and dangerous car. The carrier was held liable by a divided court, four of the judges going on the ground, that the contract for exemption from liability was void, as against public policy; and the fifth, that the negligence, as it respected the machinery of transportation, is imputable to the carrier himself. Smith v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 222, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

A common carrier, in consideration of an abatement in whole or in part of his legal fare, may lawfully contract that the passenger will take the risk of damage from the negligence of agents and servants, for which the carrier would otherwise be liable.

If he paid, as passenger, the usual fare, without reduction on account of his engagement to assume such risk, the contract would, it seems, not be binding, as without consideration.

The provisions of the general railroad law (ch. 140 of 1850, sec. 36) do not add to the general responsibility as carriers, of the corporations subject to it, nor deprive them of the power to make contracts in regard to such responsibility. Its object was to bring them within the general principle of common carriers.

Plaintiff's intestate was furnished with a ticket headed, "Cattle Dealer's Ticket on Passenger Train," by which the defendant directed its conductors to "pass Taylor & Bissell, owners of two ears of live stock, from Buffalo to Albany." On the back of this ticket was printed: "NOTICE.—The owner of stock receiving this ticket assumes all risk of accident, and expressly agrees that the company shall not be liable, under any circumstances, whether of negligence by their agents or otherwise, for any injury to the person or for any loss or injury to the stock of said owners shipped by stock or freight trains." Bissell v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 442, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

See Illinois Central R. Co. v. Reed, 37 Ill. 484; Kinney v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 513, s. c., 32 id. 407; Central R. Co. v. Mundy, 21 Ind. 48.

The plaintiff contracted for the transportation of sheep and that some one should go with them "who should take all the risks of personal injury from whatever cause, whether of negligence of defendants, its agents, or otherwise." He had a drover's pass and intended to go. After the sheep were loaded, the plaintiff was hit by wood from the engine which he was passing. The defendant was not liable. Poucher v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 263, rev'g judg't for pl'ff.

Distinguishing Stinson v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 333; and following Northrup v. R. R. Pass. Assurance Co., 43 id. 516.

The settled doctrine in this state is that a carrier of persons as well as of property, and known as a common carrier, may, by contract, have protection against liability for injury caused by its negligence. Wells v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 181; Bissell v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 25 id. 442; Poucher v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 49 id. 263; 10 Am. Rep. 364. The carrier of express matter is not exempt from liability for the death of an express messenger, because of a contract to that effect made with the express company, without the consent of the messenger. Such messenger takes the hazards incident to his business, but not such as arise from the negligence of the carrier. Brewer v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. R. Co., 124 N. Y. 59, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

Distinguishing Seybolt v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 562.

The general words of the contract of a common carrier of persons, limiting its liability, will not be considered as exempting it from liability for negligence. A contract between an express company and a railroad company provided that the defendant should be "expressly relieved from, and guaranteed against, any liability for any damage done to the agent of" the express company "whether in their employ as messenger, or otherwise."

A messenger was killed through the negligence of the defendant. The contract might be read not necessarily as releasing or preventing an action by the employes of the express company for damages or injuries received while on the road, but to indemnify the defendant in the event of such an action. Kenney v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 422, aff'g 54 Hun, 143, and judg't for pl'ff.

Plaintiff's passage ticket was never delivered to him. Not having had an opportunity to read it, he was not bound by the terms therein contained: e. g., a limitation of liability to £10 in the case of loss of his baggage. Wamsley v. Atlas S. S. Co., 50 App. Div. 199.

An assent by a passenger to limitation of the carrier's liability will not be implied when such limitation is communicated to the passenger for the first time after he has paid his fare.

The contract of carriage is consummated when the passenger pays and the carrier accepts the fare; if no special agreement be then made the conditions of carriage are prescribed by law; and any subsequent assent by the passenger, without a separate consideration, to a limitation of the carrier's liability is void. *Lechowitzer v. Stipulation on drover's pass exempting from liability for negligence was not valid. Cleveland &c. R. Co. v. Curran, 19 Oh. St. 1.

The rules as to invalidity of stipulations exempting carriers from liability are not changed by the fact that the conveyance of passengers is upon a freight train. Richmond v. Southern P. R. Co., (Or.) 67 Pac. Rep. 947.

From opinion.—Defendant's counsel "concede that the rule is general in the state and federal courts, except in Illinois and New York, that a common carrier cannot escape liability from the consequences of its negligence in carrying passengers on trains provided for that purpose; but they maintain that a railway company, not being obliged to carry passengers on a freight train, may contract in relation thereto as a private carrier and that an agreement of that character is not violative of public policy." * * * "Public policy forbids a railway company from relying upon the terms of a contract entered into with a passenger, whereby he releases it from liability resulting from its negligence while performing a duty it owes the public as a common carrier; but it may become a private carrier and escape such liability by contract, when, as a matter of convenience to, or by special agreement with a passenger, it undertakes to carry him by means not designated to accommodate the traveling public. Railway Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21. Thus an agreement of an express agent to assume all risks of accident, in consideration of being carried in a baggage car, to facilitate his own business, releases a railroad company from liability for injury resulting from a casualty, because the agent is not a passenger, and the carrier is under no obligation to transport him in such car. Blank v. Railroad Co., 182 Ill. 332; Railway Co. v. Maloney, 148 Ind. 196; Bates v. Railroad Co., 156 Mass. 506; Railroad Co. v. Voight, 176 U. S. 498." * * *

"Where railroad companies, furnishing trackage and motive power, haul the cars of circus and managerie companies over their lines of railway, in consideration of the latter assuming the risk of injuries incident to the journey, it has been held that such companies and their employés, sustaining damages or injury, could not recover therefor from the railroad companies. Railroad Co. v. Wallace, 66 Fed. Rep. 506; Robertson v. Railroad Co., 156 Mass. 525; Coup v. Railroad Co., 56 Mich. 111; Forepaugh v. Railroad Co., 128 Pa. 217. The reason assigned in these cases for enforcing the contracts of exemption from liability is that, as the railroad companies were under no legal obligation to haul such cars, they might lawfully enter into any contract to do so, and as a condition precedent therefor were authorized to limit their liability in case of accident, thus becoming private carriers in respect to such cars." * * *

"The defendant was under no legal obligation to carry passengers on its freight trains, but, having notified the public that it would do so between the stations indicated, the train, as long as it was used for that purpose, was a mixed freight and passenger train, thereby imposing upon the defendant all the duties of a common carrier in respect to any passenger riding thereon. The train in question was designated by the defendant to accommodate the traveling public generally, and was not provided for plaintiff's advantage alone, nor did he enjoy any special privileges thereon that were not extended to others."

From opinion.—"The Circuit Judge thought the case could not be distinguished from the case of Railroad Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall 357." * * * "This court held that a drover traveling on a pass for the purpose of taking care of his stock on the train, is a passenger for hire, and that it is not lawful for a common carrier of such passenger to stipulate for exemption from responsibility for the negligence of himself or his servants. This case has been frequently followed, and it may be regarded as establishing a settled rule of policy. Railway Co. v. Stevens, 95 U. S. 655; Liverpool Steam Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397." * * * "We think the law of to-day may be fairly stated as follows: 1. That exemptions claimed by carriers must be reasonable and just, otherwise they will be regarded as extorted from customers by duress of circumstances, and therefore not binding. 2. That all attempts of carriers, by general notice or special contract, to escape from liability for loss to shippers, or injuries to passengers, resulting from want of care or faithfulness, cannot be regarded as reasonable and just, but contrary to a sound public policy, and therefore invalid. But are these principles, well considered and useful as they are, decisive of, or indeed applicable to, the facts presented for judgment in the present case? We have here to consider, not the case of an individual shipper or passenger, dealing at a disadvantage with a powerful corporation, but that of a permanent agreement between two corporations embracing within its sphere of operation a large part of the transportation business of the entire country." * * * "The relation existing between express messengers and transportation companies, under such contracts as existed in the present case, is widely different from that of ordinary passengers, and to relieve the defendant in error from the obligation of his contract would require us to give a much wider extension to the doctrine of public policy than was justified by the facts and reasoning in the Lockwood case." After citing state court cases as above to the effect that, when contracting as private carrier, public policy does not forbid exemption of liability for negligence, the court proceeds: "The same doctrine prevails in New York. Bissell v. New York & E. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 442; Poucher v. New York Central R. Co., 49 N. Y. 263. Though it must be allowed that the New York decisions are not precisely in point, as those courts do not accept the doctrine of Railroad Co. v. Lockwood to its fullest extent, but hold that no rule of public policy forbids contractual exemption from liability, because the public is amply protected by the right of every one to decline any special contract, on paying the regular fare prescribed by law, that is, the highest amount which the law allows the company to charge. As against these authorities there are cited, on behalf of the defendant in error, several cases in which it has been held that postal clerks, in the employ of the Government, and who pay no fare, are entitled to the rights of ordinary passengers for hire, and it is contended that their relation to the railroad company is analogous to that of express messengers. Arrowsmith v. Nashville & E. R. Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 165; Gleeson v. Virginia Midland R. Co., 140 U. S. 435; Ketcham v. New York & E. R. Co., 133 Ind. 346; Seybolt v. Railroad Co., 95 N. Y. 562. There is, however, an obvious distinction between a postal clerk and the present case of an express messenger in this, that the messenger has agreed to the contract between the express and the railroad companies, exempting the latter from liability, but no case is cited in which the postal clerk voluntarily entered into such an agreement. To make the cases analogous, it should be made to appear that the government in contracting with the railroad company to carry the mails, stipulated that the railroad company should be exempted from liability to the postal clerk, and that the latter, in consideration of securing his position, had concurred in releasing the railroad company."

But that the messenger is not bound by such an agreement where he has no knowledge of it, see Chamberlain v. Pierson, 87 Fed. Rep. 420.

Doctrine of strict construction applied to a provision in a drover's pass, that the holder, in leaving the caboose and going along and over tracks, did so at his own risk, and held that it did not extend to anything beyond the ordinary hazards peculiar to running cattle and freight trains, and that a drover, who, while attempting to board a train beginning to move, was struck by a water spout, negligently allowed to remain close to the track, could recover. *Fitchburg & E. #### (b). DISCLOSURE OF VALUE.

When interrogated as to the value of goods or notified that the carrier has valued them for the purpose of limiting his liability, the shipper commits a legal fraud if he remain silent, and the carrier is discharged from liability for ordinary negligence; and so if the shipper falsely represent the value of the goods to be less than they are.

But where there is no special contract limiting the common law liability of the carrier, nor any notice so specially brought home to the knowledge of the shipper as to have that effect, the shipper is not bound to disclose the value of the goods, unless he is asked thereof by the carrier; but the carrier has the right to make inquiry and to have a true answer, and if he is deceived by a false answer given he will not be responsible for any loss. If, however, the carrier makes no inquiry, and no artifice is used to mislead him, he is responsible for the loss, however great may be the value. Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35.

Batson v. Donovan, 4 Barn. & Ald. 21; Orange County Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend. 116; Railroad Company v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 380; Crouch v. L. & M. W. R. Co., 14 C. B. 255; Story on Bailments, sec. 567; Riley v. Horne, 5 Bing. 217.

See, Thorogood v. Marsh (Niel Gower, 105); and Marsh v. Home (5 Barn. & Cress, 322); Pardee v. Drew, 25 Wend. 459; Warner v. West. Trans. Co., 5 Robt. 490; Richards v. Westcott, 2 Bows. 589; s. c., 7 id. 6; Great Northern R. W. Co. v. Shepherd, 11 Engl. L. & Eq. 367.

But, see contra, Brooke v. Pickwick, 4 Bing. 218; Clay v. Willan, 1 Hy. Blk. 298; Yate v. Willan, 2 East 128; Izett v. Mountain, 4 id. 371; Nicholson v. Willan, 5 id. 507.

Where a carrier by his contract limits his liability to a specified amount, if the value of the property is not stated by the shipper, and the goods are of greater value than the amount specified, silence alone, on the part of the shipper as to the real value, although there be no inquiry by the carrier and no artifice to deceive, is fraud in law, which discharges the carrier from liability for ordinary negligence.

Where the shipper accepts carriage upon the terms of a limited liability, silence is the same as an assertion of little value; and the carrier is not only thereby deprived of his adequate reward, but is misled as to the degree of care and security which he should provide.

As to whether, in such case, the carrier will be relieved where his acts amount to a misfeasance or abandonment of his character as carrier, quaere.

This action was brought to recover the value of a package of watches.

The receipt given by the company contained this clause; "If the value of the property above described is not stated by the shipper, the holder hereof will not demand of the Adams Express Company a sum exceeding fifty dollars for the loss or detention of or damage to the property aforesaid." Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the goods were not delivered, but that the box which contained them was afterwards found empty at Gowanus, Long Island. Defendant gave evidence tending to show that a greater price would have been charged for transportation had the true value been stated; also that the package would have been put in the money and valuable package department, the packages in which were transported in safes locked and sealed, while where no value was stated it went in the freight department where such precautions were not taken. Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35.

From opinion.—"Where there is no special contract limiting the common-law liability of the carrier, nor any notice so specifically brought home to the knowledge of the shipper as to have that effect, the shipper is not bound to disclose the value of the goods, unless he is asked thereof by the carrier; but the carrier (for proper reasons, Crouch v. L. & N. W. R. Co., 14 C. B. 255) has a right to make inquiry and to have a true answer, and if he is deceived by a false answer given, he will not be responsible for any loss. If, however, the carrier makes no inquiry, and no artifice is used to mislead him, he is responsible for loss, however great may be the value. Such is stated in Story on Bailments (sec. 567) to be the better opinion, and the cases there cited sustain the text. Where there is a special contract limiting liability, or other thing tantamount thereto, it is otherwise."

The disclosure of value, in such case, is a condition precedent to liability on the part of the carrier for mere ordinary negligence unaccompanied with any misfeasance or willful act.

An omission on the part of the carrier to make inquiry as to the value is not a waiver of the limitation in the contract.

To constitute a conversion of goods by a carrier, there must be a wrongful disposition of goods or withholding thereof; a mere non-delivery will not suffice, nor will a refusal to deliver goods on demand, if the goods have been lost through negligence or have been stolen.

Angell on Carriers, secs. 431-433; Seovill v. Griffith, 2 Kern. 509; Anon, 4 Esp. 157; Ross v. Johnson, 5 Burr. 2825.

Negligence alone is not misfeasance or an abandonment of the character of carrier, which will deprive them of the benefit of the limitation.

The act which will deprive the carrier of the benefit of a contract for limited liability fairly made, must be an affirmative, but not necessarily an intentional act of wrongdoing; and the onus of proving this is upon the party claiming it. Magnin v. Dinsmore, 70 N. Y. 410.

Baldwin v. L. & G. W. Steam Co., 11 Hun, 496.

Where the property is of extraordinary value, a condition that the carrier will not be responsible for loss, if the true character and value of the articles are not stated and freight paid, will operate to exempt the carrier from liability even for his own negligence, unless the condition was fulfilled. He is not bound to speak unless notice of non-liability on the part of the bailee, in case he remains silent, is given. But from the record now here, it appears that some information was given by the plaintiff's agents and servants to the carrier at the time of shipment that the boxes contained marble statuary, and hence had a special value, which would entitle the defendant to increased compensation for carriage, if it saw fit to exact it.

The shipment bill simply described two boxes of marble, "contents and value unknown," and contained a condition that no statuary would be carried at the defendant's risk unless a memorandum as above was delivered. There was no such memorandum, but the consignor's agent informed defendant that the boxes contained statuary. Boxes were marked "handle with care" and shipment was made in the usual manner on defendant's road. There was no actual or proposed concealment. Held, that a nonsuit was error; that if defendant was fully and truly informed as to the character of the property, and accepted it without requiring a written memorandum or extra compensation, it might be deemed to have waived other and further observances of the conditions; and that plaintiff was entitled to a submission to the jury of the questions of waiver, of fraudulent concealment and of defendant's negligence. Rathbone v. N. Y. C. & C. R. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 48.

A limitation of liability to a given amount, unless value is specified, was valid in the absence of fraud or gross negligence. Toy v. Long Island R. Co., 26 Misc. 792.

Statement that a package containing valuable music, was merely music, thereby obtaining transportation for less than would otherwise have been charged, was such fraud and concealment as relieved the carrier from liability for its loss. Southern Exp. Co. v. Wood, 98 Ga. 268.

Shipper voluntarily undervaluing goods was bound by a limitation of liability to the agreed valuation. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Miller, 79 Ill. App. 473.

Common honesty dictates that he who delivers property to a carrier, knowing that it requires peculiar care and attention to its safe transportation, should make known to him the necessity, in order that the proper precaution may be taken. Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio St. 723, 741.

Citing Orange Co. Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend. 85; Hardee v. Drew, 25 Wend. 85; Miles v. Cottle, 6 Bing. 743. But disclosure of value need not be made unless asked. *Sewall v. Carrier, giving reduced rates on account of property being understated as to its value, was liable in full for its loss, where it did not limit its liability. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Levi, 8 Ohio C. D. 373.

The fact that the weight of injured cotton exceeds that of the entire shipment, which was "estimated," did not exempt a carrier from liability as to that injured. Springs v. South Bound R. Co., 46 S. C. 104.

There was no fraud or concealment in a shipment of negatives, marked "Photo goods," though, were their true value known, a higher rate would have been charged. Southern P. R. Co. v. D'Arcais, (Tex. Civ. App.) 64 S. W. Rep. 813.

(c). CARE REQUIRED IN CASE OF RELEASE.

Carrier must use reasonable care although the goods are released.

Accordingly, where goods, having been shipped upon the defendant's railway under a bill of lading containing a clause releasing it from liability "for damage or loss to any article from or by fire or explosion of any kind," were destroyed by fire kindled by sparks from the locomotive hauling them,—held, that such clause did not exempt the defendant from liability for loss by fire occasioned by the omission to apply to the locomotive any apparatus known and actually in use, which would prevent the emission of sparks (2 Redfield on Railways, 3d. ed. 189, chap. 24, sec. 1, 176; Ford v. London and Southwest R. Co., 2 Foster & Finlayson, Nisi Prius R. 730; Hegeman v. Western R. R., 3 Kern. 9; Field v. N. Y. C. R. R., 32 N. Y. 339); but, that the charge that, if the jury should find "that a locomotive could be so constructed as to prevent the emission of sparks, and thereby insure combustible matter from ignition, and the defendant neglected so to construct this locomotive, they should find for the plaintiff, because there was a duty upon the defendant to use every precaution and adopt all contrivances known to science to protect the goods intrusted to it for transportation," was error. Steinweg v. Erie Railway Co., 43 N. Y. 123.

Citing Sager v. P. S. &c. R. Co., 31 Me. 228.

A common carrier must use reasonable care although transportation is at the owner's risk.

Plaintiffs shipped under such a contract, by defendant's road at "W." eighteen boxes of jewelry, to be transported to "N. Y." The evidence tended to show that, owing to inefficient facilities or accumulation of freight from three to six days more than the usual time was taken in the transportation. Also, that before delivery to the consignee and while the boxes were in the possession of the defendant, one of them was opened and a portion of its contents abstracted. The court charged the jury that they could not find a verdict for the plaintiffs, except upon the assumption that the property had been stolen or lost while in the defendant's possession, and that such loss must be found to be attributable exclusively to the negligence of defendant in delaying the transportation. Held error. Canfield v. B. & O. R. Co., 93 N. Y. 532.

S. C., 75 N. Y. 144.

If accommodations for loading horse on car are not suitable, the carrier is not excused by stipulation that loading is at the owner's risk. Potter v. Sharp, 24 Hun. 179.

Requiring a carrier to keep a "watch" over the goods, was too severe a measure of care, especially where there was a fire exemption clause, and in any event reasonable diligence was all that was required. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Gidley, 119 Ala. 523.

XIII. Contracts of Shipment.

I. ON BEHALF OF THE SHIPPER.

The presumption is that the consignee is the owner of the goods in the absence of any evidence on the subject, and is the proper party to sue for their injury or loss, and he or the person delivering the goods to the carrier may make the usual contract of shipment. Sweet v. Barney, 23 N. Y. Price v. Powell, 3 Comst. 322; Everett v. Salters, 15 Wend. 474; Angell on Carriers, see, 497; Waldron v. Price, 22 N. Y. 368.

See, York Company v. Central R. R. Co., 3 Wall. 107; Squire v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 98 Mass. 239; Christenson v. American Express Co., 15 Minn. 270; Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198; Robertson v. National S. Co., 139 N. Y. 416.

Plaintiff, a merchant in New York, received from "N. & T." of Rochester, an order in writing for certain goods to be sent them "via canal." The goods were delivered to defendants, common carriers upon the canal, consigned to "N. & T." pursuant to the order. The goods were lost en route. Held, that upon the delivery to the carrier, the title passed absolutely to the consignees, subject only to the right of stoppage in transitu, and that plaintiff, consignor, could not maintain an action for their loss. Krulder v. Ellison, 47 N. Y. 36.

See Porter Mfg. Co. v. Edwards, 29 Hun, 509.

A consignor's agent may stipulate terms for the transportation, and so a cartman has the power to release the carrier, and consignor to a distant consignee is the latter's agent to make stipulation. Squire v. New York Central Railroad Co., 98 Mass. 239; Christenson v. American Express Co., 15 Minn. 240; Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. 279; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 id. 518; Nelson v. Hudson River R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498.

1 Red. Railways, 22; citing London v. N. W. R. Co., 7 H. & N. 600; Lewis v. G. W. R. Co., 5 id. 867.

An agent employed to ship goods to the owner has authority to make such contract with the common carrier as in the honest exercise of his discretion he sees fit. Shelton v. The Merchants' Despatch Trans. Co., 59 N. Y. 258.

Persons who delivered potatoes for S. & Co., shippers, signed usual shipping bills filled out by defendant's agents. These limited defendant's common-law liability in various particulars. S. & Co. had no knowledge of and did not expressly authorize this; they, however, knew it to be the general custom of railroad companies to require it. In an action for the non-delivery of potatoes and for damages by delay in the delivery of the others, held, that conceding it to have been within the presumed authority to make or accept stipulations or conditions for the reception and carriage of the property, beyond that, so far as it was dependent upon such presumption of authority, the owners were not necessarily bound; that the provisions, so far as they may be otherwise construed, were not applicable to the shipments in question; and, therefore, only the terms and conditions, so far as reasonable and applicable to through transportation, were to be deemed within the terms of the contract. Riley v. N. Y., L. E. & W. R. Co., 34 Hun, 91; Babcock v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 49 N. Y. 491; Condict v. G. T. Ry. Co., 54 id. 500; Coffin v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 64 Barb. 379, 56 N. Y. 632; Bostwick v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 45 id. 712; Germania F. Ins. Co v. M. & C. R. R. Co., 72 id. 90; Guillaume v. General T. Co., 100 id. 491; Swift v. Pacific &c. Co., 106 id. 206; Park v. Preston, 108 id. 431.

One of the conditions in the shipping bills was to the effect that no claim for loss or detention shall be allowed unless notice in writing and particulars of the claim be "given to station freight agent at or nearest to the place of delivery within thirty-six hours after the goods, in respect to which said claim is made, are delivered." Held, that this provision was applicable to shipments beyond the terminus of defendant's railway; but that in view of the nature of the property and of the claim for damages, the time specified was unreasonable; and so, was not applicable to the shipments in question; and that a failure to give such notice was not a bar to a recovery. Jennings v. Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, 127 N. Y. 438; aff'g 52 Hun. 227.

From opinion.—"It is legitimate for a common carrier by contract with the shipper to provide for a reasonable time within which notice of claim for loss or damage shall be given as a condition of liability and the manner of giving it. Express Company v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264; Southern Express Co. v. Hunnicutt, 54 Miss. 566; 28 Am. Rep. 385; Lewis v. Great Western Ry. Co., 5 Hurl. & Norm. 867. In those cases the notices provided for were held to be reasonable, and that question is an open one for consideration. Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 551; Adams Express Co. v. Reagan, 29 Ind. 21-92 Am. Dec. 332." But see So. Ex. Co. v. Caperton, 44 Ala. 101.

The fact that the consignee of goods is the owner, and as such takes part in the negotiations with the shipper, as to the rate of freight, does not constitute him a shipper; and where the vendor accepts a bill of lading in which he is named as shipper, the acceptance of it by him creates a contract, fixing his relations as such and imposing upon him the obligations arising therefrom which the law has previously declared to be assumed by those entering into such a contract. A vendee and consignee of lumber who authorized vendor to deliver it to the carrier and superintend the shipment, was held bound by the terms of the bill of lading taken by him containing an exemption from liability for loss through perils of the sea. Donovan v. Standard Oil Co., 155 N. Y. 112; aff'g s. c., 82 Hun. 614.

A connecting carrier exempting its liability as to acts beyond its own line properly delivered the goods to the next carrier. It was not liable, because, owing to an arrangement with such next carrier by the consignee, the goods were held until subsequently rejected by the consignee. Hams v. Minneapolis &c. R. Co., 36 Misc. 181.

Right of action for loss of goods belongs to the consignor where the consignee is merely his agent or factor. Louisville &c. R. Co. v. Allgood, 113 Ala. 163.

Consignor may sue for damage to goods where consignee refused to accept them. Savannah &c. R. Co. v. Commercial Guano Co., 103 Ga. 590.

Right of stoppage in transitu was not a sufficient interest in the goods to enable consignor to sue in tort for their loss or damage. Northern P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 89 Ill. App. 30.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, the consignee of property shipped through a common carrier, and not the consignor is to be treated as the owner. Benjamin v. Levy, 39 Minn. 11.

Owner was not estopped to sue for damages, where his agent shipped the goods in cars contracted for by another, where the carrier knew of, and did not object to, that manner of shipment. Atchison &c. R. Co. v. Bryan, (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. Rep. 235.

2. IN BEHALF OF THE CARRIER.

Agent may contract to carry beyond terminus of line. Riley v. N. Y. &c. R. R. Co., 34 Hun. 91. Dorr v. N. J. S. Nav. Co., 11 N. Y. 490. (See Connecting Carriers, post ).

An agent, which a common carrier, an undisclosed principal, holds out as having authority to give shipping rates, was held to have implied power to insert in a bill of lading, a provision for insurance, which was usual at that port, without a declaration of value of the goods. The shipper was not charged with notice, that the agent had no authority to grant the insurance without a declaration, by the fact that a circular issued by the agent stated that insurance was free where the value of goods shipped was stated before sailing. The statement did not imply that insurance could not be made free by stipulation in the bill of lading, nor pretend to limit his general powers among which was the power to give bills of lading and write insurance. Lowenstein v. Lombard &c. Co., 164 N. Y. 324; rev'g s. c., 17 App. Div. 408; distinguishing Lein-kauf v. Lombard &c. Co., 12 App. Div. 302.

A carrier attempting to carry out an unauthorized contract is liable for its negligent performance. Nashville &c. R. Co. v. Smith, (Ala.) 31 South. Rep. 481.

A carrier was not liable where its agent, being instructed not to give a reduced rate to shippers without their signing bills of lading containing exemptions, exceeded his authority by himself taking advantage of the rate, as shipper, without signing a bill. Central &c. R. Co. v. Felton, 110 Ga. 597.

An agent of a connecting carrier has no implied power to extend the latter's liability after delivery to the carrier with whom it connects, so as to cover future safe delivery. Illinois &c. R. Co. v. Carter, 165 Ill. 570; s. c., 36 L. R. A. 527; rev'g s. c., 62 Ill. App. 618.

Shipper was warranted in relying on the authority of one that, with the knowledge of a carrier, holds itself out publicly in a large city as the carrier's agent. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Elgin Condensed Milk Co., 74 Ill. App. 619; s. c. aff'd, 175 Ill. 551.

Carrier was liable for the negligence of its agent in improperly billing goods. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Neumann, 84 Ill. App. 272.

Carrier was bound by the waiver of verification of a claim, specified in the contract of shipment, by one whom it allowed to hold himself out as its freight claim agent. Cleveland &c. R. Co. v. Heath, 22 Ind. App. 47.

Shipper was not bound by a secret instruction to an agent not to make such an agreement, where it was apparently within his powers to agree to deliver a car at a certain time and place. Stoner v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 109 Iowa, 551.

The company ratifies unauthorized contract by acting upon it with knowledge of the facts. Southern R. Co. v. Marshall, (Ky.) 64 S. W. Rep. 418.

A local station agent has no implied power, in the absence of custom, to extend the liability of a carrier beyond its own line by special contract. Hoffman v. Cumberland Valley R. Co., 85 Md. 391.

It is within the general authority of an agent to deliver consignments upon the expiration of the usual period of shipments. Rudell v. Ogdenburgh Transit Co., 117 Mich. 568; s. c., 44 L. R. A. 415.

It is not within the implied authority of a general manager of a railroad to agree, in consideration of shipment over its line to a third party, to guarantee payments of the purchase price therefor. Weikle v. Minneapolis &c. R. Co., 64 Minn. 296.

A station agent authorized to receive and forward freight can not bind his principal by an act within his apparent authority, where the shipper knows that he is exceeding his actual authority. Gunn v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 72 Mo. App. 34.

Where consignee was under a contract with consignor to pay freight, carrier was estopped from collecting more, after it had rendered a bill negligently understanding the amount, which the consignee paid, deducted from the purchase price and forwarded the balance to the consignor, a foreign corporation. Central R. Co. v. McCartney, (N. J. L.) 52 Atl. Rep. 515.

A local freight agent held to have no authority to bind his road for carriage beyond its lines and that it could not be implied for any previous conduct. Wolfe v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 9 Kulp. (Pa.) 401.

Local agent had no implied authority to bind his principal for shipments beyond its own line and none was inferred by his having collected freight on a through contract. Sutton v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 14 S. D. 111.

It is not within the implied power of a station agent of one place to contract for a shipment from another. Nor is it within the scope of employment of one station agent to inform another of special damages that will accrue through delay so as to charge the carrier with an increased liability therefor. Missouri &c. R. v. Belcher, 88 Tex. 549.

It was held not error to exclude a question as to specific instructions to an agent to make no oral contracts of shipment, in the absence of knowledge of them by the shipper, when such contracts were within the scope of his apparent authority. And in such case shipper was under no obligation to inquire as to particular limitations on agent's authority. San Antonio & R. Co. v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App.) 51 S. W. Rep. 883.

A general live stock agent of a railroad company has apparent authority to agree to furnish cars for shipment. International & R. Co. v. True, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

Where carriers operated in connection with other carriers each was held to be bound by the representations of the agent of the other, made to induce shipments over any part of the system. Missouri &c. R. Co. v. Wells, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 304.

Mistake in underrating merchandise for shipment bound the carrier, where the goods were sent over a different route than that agreed, which compelled the shipper to pay a higher rate. And the carrier cannot set up a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act to avoid the agreement. Pond-Decker Lumber Co. v. Spencer, 86 Fed. Rep. 846.

An agent held to have power to agree that his road would bear the expense of caring for stock during a delay owing to a strike, where the shipper was not originally under a duty in regard thereto. Carstens v. Burleigh, 20 Wash. 283.

It was within the apparent scope of authority of the agent of a carrier transporting goods into Canada to agree to advance the custom duties. Waldron v. Canadian P. R. Co., 22 Wash. 253.

An agent had authority to contract for carriage from a place not contiguous to his company's tracks, where he and his predecessors had always made it a custom to do so. Bigelow v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 104 Wis. 109.

(b). HOW MADE AND WHAT CONSTITUTES.

To the extent that courts permit a modification of the liability of a common carrier, the same may be effected, not by general notice published and posted, nor by mere ex parte unaccepted assertion, statement or notice by the carrier, but it may be made at the time the undertaking to carry is perfected by agreement with the shipper, either by express contract or by the terms of shipment demanded by the carrier in the particular instances, so fully and fairly brought to the knowledge of the shipper without his dissent, that his agreement thereto may be implied, and a contract will be inferred from his acceptance of a bill of lading or shipping receipt, save in those states where the statute prohibits such contracts to be made in such manner.* The carrier cannot compel any modification of his common-law liability.

1. FREIGHT.

A common carrier cannot screen himself from liability by notice, whether brought home to the owner or not. Since the very full and learned discussion of that question in Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 234, and Cole v. Goodwin, id. 251, it has been regarded as settled upon mature deliberation, and the conclusion arrived at in those cases has been uniformly acquiesced in and followed. Camden Co. v. Belknap, 21 Wend. 354; Clark v. Faxton, id. 153; Alexander v. Greene, 3 Hill 9; 7 id. 533; Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. 594. These decisions rest on the very satisfactory reasons, that the notice was no evidence of assent on the part of the owner, and that he had a right to repose upon the common law liability of the carrier, who could not relieve himself from such liability by any mere act of his own. But when the exception to the common law liability is made in the bill of lading, or receipt given for the goods, and delivered to the agent of the shipper, it must be deemed to have been agreed upon by the parties. Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 264; Kirkland v. Dinsmore, 62 id. 175; Dorr v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co., 11 id. 490.

The meaning of this decision and of others, employing similar language is, that carriers cannot limit their liability by public or general notice, published, advertised, or displayed by posting in such manner as might attract the attention of a shipper and passenger. This had been permitted in England until the act of 11 George IV. and 1 William IV. (1830), known as the English Land Carrier's Act (Hutchinson on Carriers 230†), which prohibited the same, but did not affect special contracts with the carrier. (Id. sec. 232.) A special contract is not limited to an express agreement signed by the parties, but includes any implied contract, or an assent to the terms proffered to or demanded of the shipper as to his particular shipment. The simple question is whether the shipper assented to the terms, however such assent may have been manifested. By the English Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854, the carrier was prohibited from limiting his liability as to all articles not mentioned in the carriers' act, unless the contract, * NOTE.—Contract in one state to carry goods to another, when goods are lost, is governed by state where loss occurred. Gray v. Jackson & Co., 51 N. H. 9. See also Texas & C. R. Co. v. Payne, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 58; Mexican & C. R. Co. v. Ware, (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. Rep. 343; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Hertzberg, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 100. When law of place of contract signed only by carrier, requires evidence other than mere receipt by the shipper to show his assent, as in Illinois. (Adams Ex. Co. v. Haynes, 12 Ill. 89; American Ex. Co. v. Schier, 55 id. 140; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Frankenberg, 51 id. 88), and the law of the place where the suit is brought presumes conclusively such assent from acceptance without dissent, the question of assent is a question of evidence, and is to be determined by the law of the place where the suit is brought. Houlley v. No. Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 301.

† NOTE.—The sections in Hutchinson on Carriers on this subject are clear and complete.

found by the court or judges to be just and reasonable, were signed by the shipper (Hutchinson on Carriers, sec. 233). The English rule, in this frequent necessity of procuring the shipper's consent to the contract, differs from that usually prevailing in America. Although in Gould v. Hill, 2 Hill, 623, it was held that the carrier could not limit his common law liability by contract or notice, such decision, denying both the manner of doing it and a right to do it at all, was not thereafter followed, as will be seen from the decisions.

When goods are shipped under a verbal agreement, such agreement is not merged in a bill of lading, partly written and partly printed, delivered to the shipper after he has parted with control of his goods, although such bill limited the liability of the carrier and expressed on its face, that by accepting it, the shipper agreed to its conditions. The mere receipt of the bill, after the verbal agreement has been acted on, and the shipper's omitting, through inadvertence, to examine the printed conditions, do not conclude him from showing what the actual agreement was. Bostwick v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 712.

Swift v. S. Co., 106 N. Y. 206; Gaines v. Union Trans. Co., 28 Ohio St. 418 (bill of lading was delivered after goods were in transit); Am. Ex. Co. v. Spellman, 90 Ill. 455; Wilde v. Trans. Co., 47 Iowa, 247; Louisville R. Co. v. Meyer., 78 Ala. 597; Cent. L. J., 1877, as to a ticket; Wilson v. R. Co., 21 Gratt. 654. Contract is made when ticket is purchased, Kent v. R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 288; Rawson v. Penn. R. Co., 48 N. Y. 212; Guillaume v. Gen. Trans. Co., 100 id. 498. After verbal contract had been made its legal effect was not changed by a receipt delivered to consignor's clerk, who delivered the goods at the station and had no authority to modify same. Filletown v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 55 Maine, 462; Gott v. Dinsmore, 111 Mass. 45.

See Wheeler v. R. Co., 115 U. S. 29; Pomitt v. R. Co., 62 Mo. 527.

Express receipt limited value of trunk: shipper by accepting assented thereto and was bound.

In the absence of fraud, concealment or improper practice, the legal presumption is that stipulations limiting its common-law liability, contained in a receipt given by such company for freight, were known and assented to by the party receiving it. Steers v. Liverpool, &c. C. S. Co., 57 N. Y. 1; Zimmer v. N. Y. Cent. &c. R. Co., 137 id. 460.

See Grossman v. Dodd, 63 Hun, 324.

Where a shipper, upon delivery of property to an express company for transportation, receives, without dissent, a receipt, with the understanding that it contains a contract on the part of the company as to the carriage, in the absence of fraud or imposition, the company has a right to infer an assent on his part to conditions in the receipt, not unusual or unreasonable, limiting its common law liability as carrier; and he is precluded from denying it thereafter to the company's injury. Collender v. Dinsmore, 55 N. Y. 200; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 56 id. 168; Hinckley v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., id. 429.

After a loss, therefore, it is too late for the shipper to object that he omitted to read the receipt, and was ignorant that it contained such conditions. Kirkland v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 171, rev'g 2 Hun. 46; 4 T. & C. 304, distinguishing Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 264.

Where goods are delivered to a carrier for transportation and before the goods are shipped a bill of lading or receipt is delivered by him to the shipper, the latter is bound to examine it and ascertain its contents, and if he accepts it without objection, he is bound by its terms; he cannot set up ignorance of its contents, and resort cannot be had to prior parol negotiations to vary them.

To take a case out of this general rule, it must appear that before the delivery of the bill of lading the goods have been shipped, so that the shipper could not have reclaimed them had he objected to the contents of the bill of lading. The Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. The Memphis & Charleston R. Co., 72 N. Y. 90, distinguishing Bostwick v. The B. & O. R. R. Co., 45 id. 712.

From opinion.—"As a general rule, when goods are delivered to a carrier for transportation, and a bill of lading or receipt is delivered to the shipper, he is bound to examine it and ascertain its contents; and if he accepts it without objection, he is bound by its terms, and resort cannot be had to prior parol negotiations to vary them. *Long v. A bill of lading has a twofold character; first, that of a receipt; and second, that of a contract. Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7.

The receipt as between the shipper and ship-owner is explainable, but parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of that portion of it constituting the contract. Parsons on Shipping, vol. 1, 190, and cases cited.

The acceptance of a bill of lading by the shipper, with knowledge of its contents, makes of that instrument a binding contract, and defines the rights and liabilities of the parties to it. C. H. & D. & M. R. Co. v. Pontius, 19 Ohio St. 221; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Memphis & C. R. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 90; Van Etten v. Newton, 131 id. 143.

A shipper is limited to an amount not exceeding the valuation specified in the contract made with the carrier, in the event of loss or injury to goods. It is incumbent upon a shipper to acquaint himself with the contents of a contract executed by him. Zimmer v. N. Y. C. & E. R. R. Co., 137 N. Y. 460.

From opinion.—"Cases where parties, proposing to have articles of property transported by a common carrier, deliberately enter into some necessary contract relating to the transportation, differ materially from those cases of travelers who commit their trunks or other articles of baggage, to an agent of some express or transfer company, and receive at the moment some paper, which, as it has been said, amounts simply to a voucher enabling them to follow and identify their property. Madan v. Sherard, 73 N. Y. 329."

Plaintiff was held to have acquiesced in the terms of a bill of lading limiting the carrier's liability where, though the original shippers, from whom they purchased the goods after shipment, did not know of its contents, the plaintiff was aware thereof and with that knowledge gave directions concerning the disposition of the goods. North British &c. Ins. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co., 9 App. Div. 4; s. c. aff'd, 158 N. Y. 726.

Acceptance of a receipt, containing a limitation as to the value of goods not stated, binds the shipper under a statute providing that one accepting a written contract with knowledge of its terms assents to the limitations as to valuation therein contained. Michalitschke v. Wells &c. Co., 118 Cal. 683.

Carrier cannot by any act of his own, to which the other party does not consent, limit his liability; the parties may make an express contract for that purpose, and if they both have a fair opportunity to understand the terms of the contract entered into, they are bound by it. Wallace v. Matthews, 39 Ga. 633.

A clause in a receipt limiting liability when no value was stated was held not binding on a shipper, unless he had expressly assented thereto as required by statute. Wood v. Southern Ex. Co., 95 Ga. 451.

A carrier can not limit its liability by a mere notice, not amounting to an express contract. Central &c. R. Co. v. Lippman, 110 Ga. 665.

Whether the agreed valuation was an arbitrary preadjustment of damages or was honestly made on probable valuation, was for the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Horner, (Ga.) 41 S. E. Rep. 649.

The usual rule in Illinois, where the statute has not changed it, is that the shipper is bound by the terms of receipt if he takes it with full knowledge. Adams Ex. Co. v. Haynes, 42 Ill. 89.

* NOTE.—By Illinois R. S. 1874, sec. 33, chap. 114 (and as to railroads, sec. 71) it is provided that whenever any property is received by a common carrier to be transported from one place to another, within or without this State, it shall not be lawful for such carrier to limit his common law liability safely to deliver such property at the place to which the same is to be transported by any stipulation or limitations expressed in the receipt for such property.

Restrictions on a carrier's liability did not bind a shipper where he did not accept the bill of lading, while understanding and assenting to its provisions. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Davis, 159 Ill. 53.

Restriction of a carrier's liability to its own line, contained in a receipt delivered on acceptance of the goods for carriage consigned beyond, does not constitute a valid exemption. Such limitation may however be accomplished by contract through the assent to them, when inserted in a bill of lading. Mere acceptance of the bill does not constitute such assent. But it is a question of fact for the jury. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Simon, 160 Ill. 648.

Carrier can not bind a shipper to the limitations of its liability contained in a bill of lading without the latter's signature or proof of his positive assent thereto. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Carter, 165 Ill. 570; s. c., 36 L. R. A. 527; rev'g s. c., 62 Ill. App. 618.

To be bound, shipper must assent to the contract of limitation. Chicago &c. R. Co. v. Calumet Stock Farm, 194 Ill. 9; aff'g s. c., 96 Ill. App. 337.

Free transportation to care for stock construed not a consideration for an exemption from liability for loss by fire, but was a consideration for the assumption of the care of the stock by the shipper. Baltimore &c. R. Co. v. Crawford, 65 Ill. App. 113.

Assumption of the duty of feeding and watering stock by the shipper and limitation of company's liability therefor was valid, though the written contract was not signed until it had been nearly performed. Cleveland &c. R. Co. v. Patterson, 69 Ill. App. 438.

A shipper, entitled by his original contract to free transportation to look after his cattle, was not bound by the provisions of a subsequent one executed hurriedly and under protest to gain the right secured by the original contract. Wabash R. Co. v. Lannum, 71 Ill. App. 84.

Subsequently issued bills of lading were held to be mere evidence of dates and quantities of shipment without effect in varying a previous parcel contract for shipment. St. Louis &c. R. Co. v. Elgin Condensed Milk Co., 74 Ill. App. 619; s. c. aff'd, 175 Ill. 557.

Mere receipt of bill of lading does not show assent to conditions therein. Burden is on carrier to establish such assent. Elgin &c. R. Co. v. Bates Mach. Co., 98 Ill. App. 311.

Issuing bill of lading after loss with exemptions was ineffective to limit liability. Cleveland &c. R. Co. v. Wilson, 99 Ill. App. 367.

A reduced rate was sufficient consideration to support a limitation of liability, and the shipping contract was valid, though signed shortly after the goods had started in transit, where that act was the concluding part of an entire transaction. Stewart v. Cleveland &c. R. Co., 21 Ind. App. 218.

By shipper accepting and acting upon bill of lading, his knowledge of its stipulations, limiting carrier's liability to his own line, will be binding. Mulligan v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 36 Iowa, 181.

Having concluded a verbal contract for the shipment of goods with no mention of limitation of liability, shipper put the receipt containing limitations of the carrier's liability in his pocket without looking at them. He was not bound thereby. Stoner v. Chicago & C. R. Co., 109 Iowa, 551.

Though a carrier offers two rates, one without and a lesser one with a limitation of its liability, the shipper is not bound by the acceptance of the latter, where he has no freedom of choice, but is coerced into it. Atchison & C. R. Co. v. Mason, 4 Kan. App. 391.

Where shipper had been accustomed to ship subject to an exemption as to loss beyond the carrier's own line, he must be taken to have contracted in reference thereto though the specific contract was not read over to him. Richmond & C. R. Co. v. Richardson, (Ky.) 66 S. W. Rep. 1035.

Where an invoice of merchandise stated that it was at the risk of the bailee from fire or otherwise until returned, there was an implied promise on part of bailee to assume such risk. Heinstein v. Watts, 84 Me. 139.

Evidence is not admissible, in absence of fraud, to show that consignor did not read terms of bill of lading delivered to him by the carrier. Rice v. Dwight Mfg. Co., 2 Cush. 80, 87.

Co.*, 12 Gray, 388, where limitation was in form of a notice printed on back of passenger ticket, and there was no presumption of assent by person at time of receiving the ticket; also, distinguishing Buckland v. Adams Ex. Co., 97 Mass. 124, where the shipper employed a workman to deliver the package to the carrier, and the limitation was in the receipt delivered to him, contrary to the former usage between the shipper and carrier; Perry v. Thompson, 98 Mass. 249, where.

in the previous dealings of the parties, property had been received and carried without any notice relating to the carrier's liability, and from fact that printed parts of notice were so obscured by revenue stamp as not to be read intelligibly.

A contract and release, executed by a shipper months after the shipment was unenforceable, where it was not supported by a new consideration. Hendrick v. Boston &c. R. Co., 170 Mass. 44.

Shipper had previously sent goods without expressed valuation, being aware of increased rate for goods above $50 in value, and, on this occasion, saw the receipt containing the limitation as to value unless expressed, and corrected an error as to date. Held, evidence of knowledge and assent to the limitation. Graves v. Adams Ex. Co., 176 Mass. 280.

Under a statute forbidding railroad companies from limiting their liability as carriers, such liability may nevertheless be limited by special contract. But a company cannot refuse to carry unless a shipper enter into such an agreement. If not imposed upon or misled, a shipper is bound by limitations in a bill of lading which he accepts, though he fails to read it and does not know its contents. The consignee is bound by the terms made by his consignor.* McMillan v. M. S. & N. I. R. Co., 16 Mich. 79.

From opinion.—COOLEY, J. "There are some matters in respect to which the carrier may qualify his liability by mere notice. Mr. Greenleaf says: 'It is now well settled that a common carrier may qualify his liability by a general notice to all who may employ him, of any reasonable requisition to be observed on their part, in regard to the manner of delivery and entry of parcels, and the information to be given to him of their contents, the rates of freight, and the like; as, for example, that he will not be responsible for goods above a certain sum, unless they are entered as such, and paid for accordingly.' 2 Greenl. Ev., sec. 235; see Western Transportation Co. v. Newhall, 24 Ill. 466. These are but the reasonable regulations which every man should be allowed to establish for his business, to insure regularity and promptness, and to properly inform him of the responsibility he assumes. And it has been held that notice derived from the usage of the carrier may determine the manner in which he is authorized to make delivery. Farmers & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Trans. Co., 16 Vt. 52; same case, 18 id. 131, and 23 id. 186. But beyond the establishment of such rules, the force of a mere notice cannot extend. Subject to reasonable regulations, every man has a right to insist that his property, if of such description as the carrier assumes to convey, shall be transported subject to the common-law liability.

* NOTE. This case was decided in 1867. By sec. 5239 of Michigan Statutes (C. L. 1897 ch. 131) it is provided that "no railroad company shall be permitted to change or limit its common law liability as a common carrier, by any contract, or in any other manner, except by a written contract, none of which shall be printed, which shall be signed by the owner or shipper of the goods or property to be carried." And by §6239, providing for the incorporation of railroads, it is provided that: "Any railroad company organized under this act receiving freight for transportation, shall be entitled to the rights and subject to the liabilities of common carriers except as herein otherwise provided; but no such company shall be suffered to lessen or abridge its common law liability as a common carrier, unless by an agreement to be signed by both parties."

"A common carrier has no right to refuse goods offered for carriage at the proper time and place, on tender of the usual and reasonable compensation, unless the owner will consent to his receiving them under a reduced liability; and the owner can insist on his receiving the goods under all the risks and responsibilities which the law annexes to his employment.*

Steam Navigation Co.*, 4 Sandf. 136; and 11 N. Y. 485; Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243. The fact that a restrictive notice is shown to have been actually received or seen by the owner of the goods will not raise a presumption that he assents to its terms, since it is as reasonable to infer that he intends to insist on his rights as that he assents to their qualification, and the burden of proof is upon the carrier to establish the contract qualifying his liability, if he claims that one exists. N. J. Steam Navigation Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 382, per Nelson, J.†

"The evidence of such a contract in the present case consists, first, of the defendant's mode of doing business; second, of what are called in the case bills of lading, and which contain the supposed limitations. It is admitted by the plaintiffs that all the contracts of affreightment, the instructions to the agents, and the printed rules posted in all the depots and station houses of defendants for the past ten years, have contained clauses exempting them from liability for loss by fire, and providing that when goods are in the depot awaiting delivery to consignees, the company will be liable as warehousemen only, and not as carriers; and that plaintiffs have been accustomed to do business with defendants, and to receive and send goods over their road under bills of lading of this description.

"There are several reasons why knowledge in plaintiffs of defendant's usage to make restrictive contracts cannot control the present case. In the first place, knowledge of such usage can in no case of the kind be allowed force beyond that which could be given to notice of an intention on the part of the carrier to restrict his liability, brought home to the party in any other mode: and we have already seen that the force of such notices is exceedingly circumscribed. And it can hardly be seriously claimed that the plaintiffs, by accepting restrictive contracts in some cases, have thereby debarred themselves from insisting upon their common-law rights thereafter. In the second place, the defendants have no power under the law to establish a usage restricting their liability: as that would come directly in conflict with the clause in the general railroad law heretofore quoted. And in the third place, if this were otherwise, the usage would be irrelevant to the present case, since the proof relates to dealings between the parties to this suit at Detroit, and to usages understood by the plaintiffs here, while the contracts here in question were in each instance made with consignor at a distance, and in most cases by other railroad companies, whose usages do not seem to be uniform.

" It remains to be seen whether the conditions embodied in the bills of lading are to be treated as a part of the contract for transportation and to be regarded as assented to by the consignors, notwithstanding they may not have read them.

" A bill of lading proper is the written acknowledgement of the master of a vessel that he has received specified goods from the shipper, to be conveyed on the terms therein expressed to their destination, and there delivered to the parties therein designated. Abbott on Shipping, 322. It constitutes the contract between the parties in respect to the transportation; and is the measure of their rights and liabilities, unless where fraud or mistake can be shown. Redf. on Railways, 307-309, and notes. Ang. on Carriers, sec. 223. It has acquired from usage a negotiable character, and the carrier may be estopped, as against the indorsee for value, from showing mistakes in giving it. Redf. on Railways, 307. Whether the contracts which railroad companies are accustomed to give on the receipt of goods for transportation, and which are usually called by the same name, are subject to all the same incidents as the bills of lading proper, we need not now consider; but it will not be disputed that they fix the rights and liabilities of the parties when their terms have been agreed upon, and it is, I think, the weight of authority, and certainly the rule in this state, that the carrier may stipulate in them for a limitation of his common-law liability. Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243.

" Bills of lading are signed by the carrier only, and where a contract is to be signed only by one party, the evidence of assent to its terms by the other party consists usually in his receiving and acting upon it. This is the case with deeds-poll, and with various classes of familiar contracts, and the evidence of assent derived from the acceptance of the contract, without objection, is commonly conclusive. I do not perceive that bills of lading stand upon any different footing. If the carrier should cause limitations upon his liability to be inserted in the contract in such a manner as not to attract the consignor's attention, the question of assent might fairly be considered an open one, (Brown v. Eastern R. R. Co., 11 Cush. 97.); and if delivery of the bill of lading was made to the consignor under such circumstances as to lead him to suppose it to be something else—as, for instance, a mere receipt for money—it could not be held binding upon him as a contract, inasmuch as it had never been delivered to and accepted by him as such. King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565. But, except in these and similar cases, it cannot become a material question whether the consignor read the bill of lading or not. The ground upon which it is claimed that this becomes important seems to be that parties generally receive these contracts without reading them or inquiring into their terms, taking whatever the railroad companies see fit to give them, and that they are thus liable to be imposed upon and defrauded, unless the courts interfere to protect them. Or if we may be allowed to state the same thing in different words, as everybody is negligent in these matters, and will not give the necessary attention to their contracts that is essential to the protection of their interests, the courts must interfere to set them aside wherever extraneous evidence of actual assent is not produced. If the courts possess any such power, and it is expedient to exercise it, it may be important to consider, at the outset, whither it will lead us. Bills of lading are not the only contracts that are received in this careless way. Deeds, mortgages, and bills of sale are every day given and received without being read by the parties though they may contain provisions which have not been the subject of special negotiation. Policies of insurance, which more nearly resemble the instruments now in question, are still more often received without examination. In the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, no one ever supposed it was competent for the courts to reform such instruments in behalf of a party who would not inform himself of their purport. Nothing would be certain or reliable in business transactions if contracts were liable to be set aside on grounds like these. The law does not assume to be the guardian of parties compotes mentes in respect to the lawful contracts which they may make, but it proceeds upon the idea that where fraud has not been practiced, and mistake has not intervened, the general interests of the community are best subserved by leaving every man to the protection of his own observation and diligence.

"It is argued that the consignor had no occasion to examine the bill of lading, because he had a right to suppose it recognized the common-law liability. But the common law does not establish the rates of freight or the place of delivery; and for stipulations respecting these, at least, every man must examine his bill of lading. Moreover, we cannot overlook the facts that a large proportion of these instruments are issued with restrictive clauses, and that carriers arrange their tariffs of freights in the expectation that they will be accepted. These facts are so well understood that a person exercising ordinary diligence in his own affairs, would not be likely to accept one of these instruments without examination, if he expected to hold the carrier to the liability which would rest upon him in the absence of special contract.

"I do not find any case in which a court has assumed to set aside such a contract on the ground that the party had failed to read it. An exemption from liability from losses arising from specified causes, when embodied in the bill of lading, has been frequently recognized as a part of the contract, though it did not distinctly appear to have been brought to the consignor's notice. Davidson v. Graham, 2 Ohio, N. S. 131; Parsons v. Monteath, 13 Barb. 353; York Co. v. Central R. R. Co., 3 Wall. 107; Dorr v. N. J. Steam Navigation Co., 11 N. Y. 491; and in the case last referred to, it is said that the exemption, when embodied in the bill of lading, must be deemed to have been assented to by the parties. The same presumption would seem to have been acted upon in Moore v. Evans, 14 Barb. 524; Kallman v. Ex. Co., 3 Kan. 205, and Whitesides v. Thurkill, 20 Miss. 599; and it is in accordance with the general rule applicable to written contracts."

The assent of the shipper or owner of goods to conditions limiting common-law liability, is not to be implied or presumed, but in each case of an action for a loss the assent must be shown by competent evidence, as in other cases of contracts. As the carrier is bound to receive and transport all goods offered for a reasonable compensation, subject to all the responsibility incident to the employment, the presumption is, in the absence of proof sufficient to remove it and to fix a different liability, that the shipper intended to insist on his common law right. *New Jersey v. From opinion.—"In the New Jersey Steam Navigation Company v. The Merchants' Bank (6 How. 344), and York Company v. Central Railroad, (3 Wall. 107), speaking of the right of the carrier to restrict his obligation by a special agreement, the judge said: 'It by no means follows that this can be done by an act of his own. The carrier is in the exercise of a sort of public office, from which he should not be permitted to exonerate himself without the assent of the parties concerned. And this is not to be implied or inferred from a general notice to the public limiting his obligation, which may, or may not, be assented to. He is bound to receive and carry all the goods offered for transportation, subject to all the responsibilities incident to his employment, and is liable to an action in case of refusal. If any implication is to be indulged from the delivery of the goods under the general notice, it is as strong that the owner intended to insist upon his rights and the duties of the carrier, as it is that he assented to their qualification. The burden of proof lies on the carrier, and nothing short of an express stipulation by parol or in writing should be permitted to discharge him from duties which the law has annexed to his employment.'"

Limitation of liability was not effectual, where it was not based on any consideration whatever. Berry v. West Virginia &c. R. Co., 44 W. Va. 538.

The presumption of assent of the shipper to the terms of a bill of lading raised by delivery to and acceptance thereof by him is not overcome, in the absence of fraud or deceit, by evidence of his failure to read it. And evidence that in many cases the same rate was charged when no bill of lading was issued, does not overcome the presumption of consideration for a special contract contained in the bill of lading. Schaller v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 97 Wis. 31.

2. BAGGAGE.*

Passenger in a railroad car, dimly lighted by a single light at one end, delivered two baggage checks to an express messenger and received in return a card or receipt on which the numbers of the checks were entered, and which also contained an agreement below the receipt and separated therefrom by a line drawn under it, limiting the liability of the company, printed in much smaller type than the rest of the card or receipt. It was not read by the passenger, and was in fact illegible where he was sitting. The card or ticket was not signed by any one, and did not appear like a contract, and would not from its general appearance be taken for anything more than a token or check, denoting the number of the baggage checks received, to be used for the identification of the baggage on its delivery, and Judge Church, in the conclusion of his opinion, says that no contract was proved:

1st. Because it was obscurely printed. (See Verner v. Sweitzer, 32 Penn. St. 208.)

2d. Because the nature of the transaction was not such as necessarily charged the plaintiff with knowledge that the paper was a contract, and

3d. Because the circumstances attending the delivery of the card repelled the idea that the plaintiff had such knowledge or assented to the terms of the alleged contract. Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 264.

From opinion.—"This paper is subject to the criticism made by Lord Ellenborough, in Butler v. Heane (2 Camp. 415), in which he said that 'it called attention to everything that was attractive, and concealed what was calculated to repel customers;' and added: 'If a common carrier is to be allowed to limit his liability, he must take care that any one who deals with him is fully informed of the limits to which he confines it.' * * * In Brown v. E. R. R. Co. (11 Cush. 97), where the limitation was printed on the back of a passenger ticket, the court say: 'The party receiving it might well suppose that it was a mere check, signifying that the party had paid his passage to the place indicated on the ticket.' In cases of Prentice v. Decker, (49 Barb. 21), and Limburger v. Westcott, (Id. 283), limitations were claimed upon the delivery of similar cards of another express company, and the court held, in both cases, that such delivery did not charge the persons receiving them with knowledge that they contained contracts. A different construction was put upon the delivery of a similar card, in Hopkins v. Westcott (6 Blatchf. R. 64); but I infer that the learned judge who delivered the opinion intended to decide that something short of an express contract will suffice to screen the carrier from his common-law liability, and that a notice, personally served, which could be read, would have that effect. The attention of the court does not seem to have been directed to the distinction between such a notice and a contract. The delivery and acceptance of a paper containing the contract may be binding, though not read, provided the business is of such a nature and the delivery is under such circumstances as to raise the presumption that the person receiving it knows that it is a contract, containing the terms and conditions upon which the property is received to be carried. In such a case it is presumed that the person assents to the terms, whatever they may be. This is the utmost extent to which the rule can be carried, without abandoning the principle that a contract is indispensable. The recent case of Grace v. Adams (100 Mass. 560), relied upon by the defendant's counsel, was decided upon this principle. The plaintiff delivered a package of money to an express company, and took a receipt containing a provision exempting the company from liability for loss by fire; and the court held that he knew the paper contained the conditions upon which the money was to be carried, and was, therefore, presumed to have assented to them, although he did not read the paper. The court say: 'It is not claimed that he did not know, when he took it, that it was a shipping contract, or bill of lading.' So, in Van Goll v. The S. E. R. Co. (104 Eng. Com. Law R. 75), the same principle was decided. Willes, J., said: 'Assuming that the plaintiff did not read the terms of the condition, it is evident she knew they were there.' Kenting, J., said: 'It was incumbent on the company to show that such was the contract.' * * * 'I think there was evidence that the plaintiff assented to those terms.'"

The liability of a railroad company for the safe carriage of a passenger's baggage is not limited by a notice, printed upon the face of the ticket issued by it, stating the terms upon which baggage will be carried.

If, however, the passenger's attention is called to it when purchasing his ticket, or if he knew of it when he purchased, the law will presume, in the absence of any objection upon his part, that he assented to the terms. The contract is made, and rights and duties of the parties are determined, when the ticket is purchased. A discovery by the passenger of the notice after he had entered upon his journey does not affect his rights. Rawson v. The Pennsylvania R. Co., 48 N. Y. 212.

From opinion.—"The question to be considered is, whether the matter printed upon the face of the railroad ticket limited the liability of the defendant; and that it did not, is now too well settled to admit of dispute. Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 264. The words thus printed do not purport to embody the contract between the parties. They are mere notice as to the terms upon which a passenger's baggage will be carried, and are entitled to no more force because they are printed upon the face of the ticket than if they had been printed on the back of the ticket, or on a separate piece of paper posted up at the ticket office; and hence this case is clearly within the rule that a carrier cannot limit his liability by notice, but can do so only by express contract.

It must, however, be admitted, that if the railroad agent had called plaintiff's attention to this language, when he sold the ticket and took her money, or if it had been shown that she knew of this language when she paid her money and took the ticket, the law would presume, in the absence of objection on her part, that she assented to the terms therein expressed. But here she testified that she did not read this language, and there is no proof that she received the ticket under such circumstances that the law will presume that she must have known and understood the language, and assented to the terms. It would be unreasonable to presume that a passenger, when he buys a railroad ticket at a ticket office, stops to read the language printed upon it, and it would be equally unreasonable to hold that a passenger must take notice that the language upon his ticket contains any contract, or in any way limits the carrier's common-law liability.

A ticket does not generally contain any contract, and is not intended to. It is a mere token or voucher adopted for convenience to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another.

The contract between these parties was made when the plaintiff bought her ticket, and the rights and duties of the parties were then determined. Hence, even if the plaintiff had read what appears upon her ticket after she had entered upon her journey, it would have made no difference with her rights."

Stipulation on a ticket, signed by defendant's agent, that the defendant should be liable only for gross negligence, and then only to the extent of fifty dollars ($50), unless a bill of lading were signed therefor, specifying the articles, and that the money and jewels were at the owner's risk. A trunk was not delivered or accounted for and the defendant was grossly negligent and liable to the extent of fifty dollars ($50). Steers v. Liverpool, N. Y. & H. R. S. Co., 57 N. Y. 1, rev'g judgt for plff.

Where a traveler, on delivery of baggage to a local express company, receives a paper, which, from the circumstances of the transaction, he has a right to regard simply as a receipt or voucher, to enable him to follow and identify his property, and no notice is given to him that it embodies the terms of a special contract, or is intended to subserve any other purpose than as a voucher, his omission to read the paper is not per se negligence, and he is not, as a matter of law, bound by its terms. Madan v. Sherard, 73 N. Y. 329, aff'g judg't for pl'ff.

The question whether, in a particular case, the party receiving such a receipt accepted it with notice of its contents or with notice that it contained the terms of a special contract, so as to require him to acquaint himself with its contents, is one of evidence to be determined by the jury.

Defendant's agent came into a railroad car, in which plaintiff was traveling, and called for baggage; he received the check for plaintiff's trunk, with directions as to the delivery, and marked on a blank receipt the date, number of check and place of delivery, which he handed to plaintiff, without anything being said as to its contents. The car was dimly lighted, so that plaintiff, where he was seated, could not have read the receipt; without looking at or reading it, he put it in his pocket. The receipt was marked upon the margin "domestic bill of lading," and purported to be a contract relieving defendant from, or limiting his liability in certain specified cases, and among others limiting its liability, save in case of a special contract, to $100. The court refused to charge, as matter of law, that the delivery of the receipt created a contract for the carriage of the trunk under its terms, and limited defendant's liability to the amount specified, but submitted the question to the jury. Held, no error: that defendant, in order to relieve itself from full liability, was bound to establish a contract upon the special terms contained in the receipt; that no such contract arose, as matter of law, from the acceptance of the receipt under the circumstances.

Plaintiff, a passenger from Europe, able to read English, met the agent of the defendant on an open pier, in daylight, and delivered to him the trunk, received a receipt therefor and thereupon delivered the receipt to her brother, and neither of them objected to its terms, which limited the liability of the company to $100, unless there was a special agreement in writing. The plaintiff was entitled to recover the actual amount of the damage to the contents of the trunk through the defendant's negligence, without limit. The burden was upon the defendant to show that the passenger assented to the terms of the receipt, which was not shown. Grossman v. Dodd &c., 63 Hun, 324; aff'g judg't for pl'ff; aff'd, 137 N. Y. 599.

From opinion.—"As stated in Madan v. Sherard (73 N. Y. 329), where a traveler, on delivery of baggage to a local express company, receives a paper which, from the circumstances of the transaction, he has a right to regard simply as a receipt or voucher to enable him to follow and identify his property, and no notice is given to him that it embodies the terms of a special contract; or is intended to subserve any other purpose than a voucher, his omission to read the paper is not per se negligence and he is not, as matter of law, bound by its terms.

The question whether, in a particular case, the party receiving such a receipt accepted it with notice of its contents, or with notice that it contained the terms of a special contract, so to require him to acquaint himself with its contents, is one of evidence to be determined by the jury. It will thus be seen that no such contract arises, as a matter of law, from the acceptance of the receipt, but the defendant, in order to relieve itself from full liability, is bound to establish a contract. Sunderland v. Westcott, 40 How. Pr. 469; Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 264; Rawson v. Penn. R. R. Co., 2 Abb. (N. S.) 220; Limburger v. Westcott, 49 Barb. 283; Woodruff v. Sherrard, 9 Hun, 323. * * * These cases are to be distinguished from the cases of Nicholas v. New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, 89 N. Y. 370; Guillaume v. The General Transportation Company, 100 id. 498, and Germania Fire Insurance Company v. Memphis, &c. Railroad Company, 72 id. 93."

No contract limiting the liability of a carrier for loss of baggage arises from the mere acceptance of a receipt or ticket containing such condition, unless the attention of the owner of the baggage was called to such provision or he assented to it in some particular way, although it was not necessary that it should be read by him. Lechowitzer v. Hamburg Am. Packet Co., 6 Misc. 536, aff'g judg't for pl'ff. (New York City Court.)

Defendant's passage tickets provided that baggage of a greater value than a certain sum must be specially mentioned and shipped under a bill of lading as cargo, and also that "a charge will be made for extra freight on shipboard" at a certain rate.

Plaintiff purchased her ticket and was charged the extra rate; such arrangement was out of the provision of the ticket contract and constituted a special agreement for the transportation of baggage, and the baggage not having been delivered, liability for the breach of the agreement was not avoided by the limitations in the contract. Glorinsky v. Cunard S. S. Co., 6 Misc. 388, aff'g judg't for pl'ff. (N. Y. Common Pleas.)

Notwithstanding stipulation printed on ticket: "Passengers are not allowed to carry baggage beyond $100 in value, and that personal, unless notice is given and an extra amount paid at the rate of a price a ticket for every $500 in value," recovery was allowed for articles of traveler's baggage, although their value was more than $100. Nerius v. Bay State Steamboat Co., 4 Bosw. N. Y. 226.

Woodruff v. Sherrard, 9 Hun, 322.

Carrier cannot limit his common-law liability as to safety of baggage by notice; hence notice in a stage-coach "all baggage at the risk of the owner," will not protect him in an action for loss of trunk due to negligence. Cole v. Goodwin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 251.

Clark v. Faxton, 21 Wend. N. Y. 153; Hollister v. Nowlen, 19 Wend. 234. See Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. 50.

A receipt, given by an express company in exchange for a baggage check, containing stipulations limiting liability, held not binding unless taken with knowledge of its nature and contents. Springer v. Westcott, 166 N. Y. 117; aff'g s. c., 19 App. Div. 366.

Failure to read a limitation of liability in a baggage receipt, was no excuse in view of a statute permitting such a limitation when accepted "with knowledge of its terms," where the circumstances would have led a prudent man to read it. Merrill v. Pacific Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582.

A railroad company may not exempt itself from liability for value of baggage beyond one hundred dollars, under Iowa Statute (Code, secs. 1308, 2184). Davis v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 83 Iowa, 744.

But such provision does not apply to merchandise to be shipped as baggage. Weber Co. v. Chicago &c. R. Co., 113 Iowa, 188.
